Senate Votes 1-Man Rule Of Expanded Civil Service

Action Is Blow to Opponents of Reorganization Measure.

Roosevelt Proposal Approved, 50 to 38

Second Test, However, Looms Today on Amendment.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate voted yesterday to abolish the three-man Civil Service Commission and to set up instead a single Civil Service Administrator with a 15-year term of office and vast powers to control an expanded merit system.

An amendment by Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, to maintain the Civil Service Commission in control of the merit system was defeated, 50 to 38.

Defeat came as a serious blow to the fighting Senate opposition which has been seeking through pivotal amendments to preserve existing checks on personnel and spending and to curb reorganization powers.

New Test Due Today.

But the opposition immediately rallied to support a second test amendment to require specific Congressional approval of the President's executive reorganization orders. A vote will be reached today on this amendment, sponsored by Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana.

Stronger Senate support for the Wheeler amendment was claimed last night by Senator Harry Flood Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, advocate of Government reorganization, but chief opponent of methods espoused in the Administration's bill.

The last showdown will come later this week on an amendment by Byrd to continue the present General Accounting office as a watchdog of spending.

Fifty votes were claimed by Walsh on Monday for his amendment continuing the Civil Service Commission, but the margin vanished overnight following personal appeals by Administration spokesmen.

The new civil service administrator would be appointed by the President, "without regard to any political affiliations," and must be

Tax Returns Set A District Record As 6,500 Are Filed

Marshall Montrose, adjudicator for the Veterans' Administration, filled out his income tax return and paid up the bill inside of 20 minutes last night.

At midnight he was three jumps from the pay window. A moment later he left the collector's office and weary officials closed the door.

Montrose, who lives at 1630 P street northwest, was the last of more than 6,500 persons who made yesterday the busiest the collector's office in Washington has ever seen.

Montrose said he heard a radio broadcast at 11 p. m., warning that only an hour was left to meet the deadline.

Delay Dashes Hope of More Relief in D. C.

Conferees Ready to Report $47,000,000 Supply Measure.

By James D. Secrest.

All hope of additional money for unemployment relief in Washington was shattered yesterday when Senate and House conferees agreed to postpone the date for completing a special investigation until August 1 to restrict public welfare expenditures to one-twelfth of the appropriated $900,000 in any one month.

With the bill cut to approximately $47,000,000, or more than $1,000,000 below the Senate figure, the conferees concluded their parley and prepared to report their recommendations to the Senate and House this week.

The Senate managers made final concessions to the House on several controversial issues with the result that:

The National Training School for Girls will be discontinued July 1 and the girls will be transferred to the white and colored industrial home school for boys on Wisconsin avenue and at Blue Plains, respectively.

Instead of a bridge along Massachusetts avenue over Rock Creek parkway, which would have cost $460,000, the District will enlarge

Studies to Save RailwaysBegun By Roosevelt

President Would Solve Current Problem, Draft Permanent Plan.

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt yesterday initiated an intensive study of the perplexing railroad problem in a "diagnostic session" with 14 advisers representing all viewpoints, in an effort not only to help the carriers in their present difficulties, but as a long-range program to rehabilitate them on a permanent basis.

The White House conference, which lasted more than an hour and a half, did not reach any specific conclusions on what should be done. The same group will meet with Mr. Roosevelt again at noon tomorrow to continue yesterday's discussions.

Agree on Principles.

The President revealed, however, that he and his 14 conferees were in general agreement on several broad principles, as follows:

1. It is necessary to eliminate waste in railroad operations through pooling of traffic or facilities, either with or without compulsory consolidation.

2. Protection in the form of lump sum dismissal compensation, an annual pension or some similar scheme must be provided for railroad workers laid off as a result of the Government encouraging or legislating consolidation of the carriers or pooling of facilities.

3. Railroad holding companies were held not to be in the public interest and consequently none saw any necessity for their establishment or continuance.

4. Some plan must be devised for expediting the reorganiza-

Tax Revision Hastened to Aid Recovery

Committee, Alarmed by Recession, Sets Hearings at Once.

Harrison Presses for Modification of Capital Gains Levy.

The Senate Finance Committee decided yesterday to hasten action on a revamped Administration tax bill as a major instrument for industrial recovery.

Concerned at the march of the recession, the committee scheduled public hearings on the bill from tomorrow through Saturday, with emphasis placed on speed.

The Treasury was asked to prepare revenue estimates at once on a series of specific flat-rate proposals for taxes on capital gains and corporation income. Scaling down of the individual income surtax brackets ranging higher than 60 per cent also was proposed by Chairman Pat Harrison.

Revision Called Urgent.

"This tax bill can be shaped into the finest gesture the Government can make to restore confidence and get money to work again," Harrison said following a full day of closed committee conference with experts.

Harrison asked the Treasury for an estimate of revenue yields from imposition of a flat 15 per cent rate on capital gains from assets held over one year, or held over two years. He also asked for estimates on revenue gains or losses from imposition of flat 17, 18, 18½ or 19 per cent rates on corporate income.

The committee chairman said he considered revision of the capital gains tax the most urgent single thing the Finance Committee can do to turn the recession.

"By properly revising the capital gains tax, we will do more to cause people to release frozen credit and to invest, than by any other action in the bill," said Harrison.

Asks Separate Treatment.

"To my mind this is most important. A lot of people have money tied up and would like to take it out without having to give the Government most of it."

Under Harrison's proposal, gains from assets held more than one or two years, and then sold, would be treated separately from other income. Instead of being made subject to high income surtax brackets, a flat 15 per cent tax would be levied against such gains.

With a strong committee majority behind him, Harrison emerged from preliminary Senate tax conferences

Youth of 17 Dies In Fire With Two He Tried to Save

By the Associated Press.

Kitzmiller, Md., March 15.—James Haddick, 17, broke through a cordon of relatives today to dash into his blazing home and died in a vain attempt to save his two little brothers.

Trapped in the flames, William, 6, and Buck, 4, also died.

The fire started in the dining room of the six-room frame house occupied by Samuel Haddick, crippled relief client.

James escaped before the flames curtained the doors and windows. Outside, he paused and listened as the little boys screamed, then started back to the burning building. Members of the family and others tried to stop him, but he pushed by them and rushed into the house.

The tense family saw him reappear in the doorway with William in his arms. Two more steps would have brought him free of the fire.

He stumbled on the doorsill and swayed backward into the house. The upper floor crashed in and covered all three.

French Warships Rush to Barcelona After Appeal for Help.

Blum Fears Foes Threaten 2 Gates

German Ring Tightens With Successes on Two Borders.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 15.—Premier Juan Negrin, of loyalist Spain, was learned tonight to have told France in a flying visit that his government was unable to hold out against the insurgent drive unless immediate aid were forthcoming.

The Spanish premier's hurried visit to Paris was kept secret until he had returned by plane to Barcelona, Spanish government capital threatened by advancing insurgents.

Negrin was said to have pleaded with French government officials to send him 200 planes and large quantities of munitions to stave off the insurgent attack.

Army Chiefs Called.

Barcelona dispatches said the Spanish premier summoned his ministers into meeting as soon as he reached his temporary capital.

Shortly after Negrin left Paris Premier Blum called a quick meeting of France's military chiefs and national defense ministers to consider what they saw as threatening changes in both Spain and Austria.

At almost the same time Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour told the British ambassador, Sir Eric Phipps, France was ready to participate in any mediation of the Spanish civil war by foreign powers, though both Spanish government and insurgent sources denied any move had been made for an armistice.

Three Warships to Barcelona.

Officials made known France was considering "precautions" against the threat German and Italian forces in Spain presented at the Pyrenees, the Franco-Spanish border.

The government's decision to send three warships under forced draft to Barcelona to evacuate French citizens was believed to have been taken as a result of Negrin's visit.

Precipitous retreat of Spanish government troops and absorption of Austria by Germany brought the emergency meeting of Premier

Soviet Will Fight Nazis for Czechs If France Helps

Moscow, March 15 (AP).—A high Soviet official tonight said Russia would go to the aid of Czechoslovakia in case of a German attack, if France also gave her central European ally military assistance.

Both France and Russia have agreed in treaties to aid Czechoslovakia against aggression. The Russian treaty provides assistance, however, only in the event of similar French aid.

"We would make a path," he said, to reach the Czech republic, which is separated from Soviet territory by a strip of southern Poland.

Reds Execute 18; Bukharin, Rykov And Yagoda Shot

Moscow, March 15 (U.P.).—Eighteen veteran Soviet revolutionaries, convicted Sunday of plotting to kill Josef Stalin, dismember the Soviet Union and set up a capitalistic system, have been executed by firing squads, it was announced officially tonight. Three others escaped with long prison sentences.

Among those executed were Nikolai L. Burkharin, former president of the Communist International and veteran journalist who alone refused to plead for his life; Henry G. Yagoda, once head of the dreaded OGPU, secret police; Alexi Rykov, for ten years premier of Soviet Russia; Nicholas N. Krestinsky, former vice commissar for foreign affairs, and Ambassador to Germany, and A. P. Rosengoltz, former commissar for foreign trade.

Where Franco Drives to the Sea

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

One hundred thousand insurgent troops drove eastward toward the Mediterranean Sea last night, with government troops in full retreat before them, in an effort to split loyalist Spain into two sectors. Immediate objectives of Gen. Franco's drive, which already had captured the strategic village of Raimundo and cut the chief Valencia-Barcelona road, were Nonaspe, Candesa and Valderrobres, all indicated on map, all within 30 miles of the sea. (Austrian pictures on Pages 3, 4, 5, 7 and 10.)

Shattered Loyalists in Flight; Premier Denies Seeking Truce

Franco Presses on to Split Government Territory and His Troops Reach City Only 30 Miles From the Sea.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France (On the Spanish Frontier), March 15.—Shattered government troops tonight retreated before 100,000 insurgents bent on tearing government Spain apart and forcing a quick end to the Spanish civil war.

Encountering only feeble rearguard resistance, the insurgents pushed forward 10 miles from Alcaniz to capture the strategic village of Raimundo, controlling the main inland highway from Valencia to Barcelona.

From that point only the rugged coastal Sierras stood between Gen. Franco's army and the Mediterranean, little more than 30 miles from Raimundo.

Hendaye and foreign capitals heard reports the loyalists would seek foreign mediation for an armistice, but the rumors were unconfirmed even by insurgent sources. Spanish Ambassadors in London and Paris issued denials.

[The loyalist government announced, following an emergency cabinet session, that Franco's "win-the-war" drive to the Mediterranean has been smashed. Premier Juan Negrin angrily denied reports abroad that he had sued for an armistice or that the government was on the verge of fleeing from the provisional capital here, according to the United Press.—Editor's note.]

Since Franco started his overwhelming spring offensive a week ago from Villanueva, on the Aragon front between Zaragoza and Teruel, his troops have advanced about 65 miles, conquering nearly 2,000 square miles of territory.

Rapidly consolidating his strength along a new 20-mile line from Caspe to Alcaniz today, Franco struck out again toward new objectives—Nonaspe, 15 miles due east of Caspe; Candesa, 25 miles east of Alcaniz, and Valderrobres, on the Matarrana River, 25 miles southeast of Alcaniz.

Italian Black Arrow brigades, foreign legionnaires, Moorish cavalry and foot troops and native Navarrese swept forward along the wide front.

Their objective was to separate Catalonia, Spain's northeastern corner, from the rest of government territory, cutting Barcelona from government Valencia and Madrid.

Broad highways leading out of Alcaniz opened the way for Franco's mechanized and motorized units.

Baron Rothschild, Banker, Reported Prisoner of Nazis

London, March 15 (U.P.).—The Exchange Telegraph Agency reported tonight from Budapest that Baron Louis de Rothschild, of the Austrian house of the famous banking family, has been arrested in Vienna by the Nazi regime.

Rothschild was head of the Credit-Anstalt of Vienna, largest bank in the Danube region, which precipitated a near-panic in May, 1931, when it almost collapsed. Only intervention of the Austrian government with heavy loans saved it from closing.

Baron Rothschild is related to Baron Eugene de Rothschild who, with his Philadelphia-born wife, entertained the Duke of Windsor at Enzesfeld Castle in Austria a year ago while the duke waited for Mrs. Wallis Warfield's divorce decree to become effective.

17 Perish, Hundreds Homeless As Tornadoes Sweep 7 States

By the Associated Press.

Seventeen persons were reported killed yesterday and considerable property damage resulted in prespring tornadoes that struck in seven States—Illinois, Missouri, Alabama, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi and Iowa.

The heaviest loss of life apparently was in Belleville, Ill., where at least seven persons were reported dead. Six others died in the vicinities of Bakerville and Wardell, Mo., where a storm cut a 20-mile path, demolishing hundreds of homes.

At least 20 homes were reported wrecked in the Belleville, Ill., storm. Gas, pouring from damaged mains, added to the havoc and 100 soldiers from Scott Field were sent to assist in first aid work.

Other twisters took their toll in scattered Midwest and Southern communities.

The Belleville storm's terrific force crumbled brick buildings, splintered frame houses into kindling, smashed automobiles and wrecked facilities of public utility companies.

Mayor George Remnsnider, after a survey of the stricken area, said property damage would run to $1,000,000.—(Picture, Page 10.)

Czechoslovakia.

By the Associated Press.

Prague, March 15.—The Czechoslovak House of Deputies was thrown into turmoil today by the virtual ultimatum of Karl Hermann Franck, vice president of the Sudeten German Party, that the nation accede to German demands or face the consequences.

"At this hour," Franck read from a statement on behalf of his party, "all we wish to say is that it would be politically wiser to create voluntarily a situation that gives no cause for complaint.

"The advisability to adopt such a new course now is patent to all."

Nazi Salute Raises Storm.

A storm of protest broke in the chamber when Franck, after giving the Nazi salute, addressed the body as "my comrades."

When the noise died down, Franck warned the Czech government to profit from the example of Austria, which resisted Germany.

(About 3,500,000 Sudeten, southern, Germans are Czechoslovakians and live in the peninsula-like region of Czechoslovakia that cuts a wedge into southeast Germany. Of them and Austrians, now absorbed in the new Pan-Germany, Reichsfuehrer Hitler proclaimed February 20 that ten millions of Germans living on the Reich's borders would be "protected.")

Cites Austrian Coup.

Franck declared Sudeten Germans refused to "wither in the confined space allotted" to them and warned the Czechoslovaks to heed the portents revealed by Germany's absorption of Austria.

The Sudeten German movement, he said, has a strong will to live and "the Czech government should be under no delusions as to this fact."

Reich Press Warns Czechs.

Berlin, March 15 (AP).—News commentators today posed Germany's absorption of Austria before Czechoslovakia as a warning of the need of "an early and satisfactory solution" of her minority issue.

The German press, apparently on instruction, told the neighboring, war-created republic with 3,500,000 Germans to be reasonable about meeting German demands.

The Frankfurter Zeitung declared that all Germany wanted was for the Sudeten (south) Germans in Czechoslovakia to be put on a footing of equality with the Czechs and Slovaks.

Many ardent Nazis here appeared convinced privately the Czechs would not yield to German demands.

The expression often is heard:

"Prague, after all, is a German city at the bottom. Its architecture and culture are all German."

Prague to Be Included.

This would seem to indicate that if it was thought necessary to "liberate" the Germans in Czechoslovakia, the aim would be to include in a greater Germany the Czech capital, Pilsen with its breweries and the Skoda armament works.

Germans say, however, such a solution would not be necessary if the Czechs would give the Sudeten Germans what Hitler, as self-announced protector of German minorities everywhere, may deem indispensable to their happiness.

Austria.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, March 15.—Adolf Hitler today personally ratified his bloodless conquest of his native land which formally became a German province under a governor.

The new governor, Arthur Seyss-Inquart, announced legal completion of Austria's union with the German fatherland as the Reichsfuehrer faced frenzied thousands in the Heroes' Square outside the imperial palace of the Hapsburgs.

To Direct Plebiscite.

Hitler proclaimed the creation of an expanded Germany as "the greatest achievement of my life," and ended his four days of triumph in Austria by flying back to Munich.

But he will be back soon—to carry on the campaign for the public's ratification of union with Germany in the plebiscite called for April 10.

Germany took over the Austrian government, lock, stock and barrel, even as Hitler announced "the entrance of my native land into the German Reich."

Vote Taken From Jews.

The German treasury absorbed the Austrian treasury. Hitler's foreign minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, took over direction of Austria's foreign affairs. The war department, the interior ministry and other parts of the Austrian government were placed in charge of German officials.

The new government announced that Jews no longer could vote.

Hitler rode through cheering hundreds of thousands to the square, where he declared that Austria now was "the most thoroughly German outpost of the German people."

He spoke from the spot from which Kurt Schuschnigg and Engelbert Dollfuss often had urged Austrians to cling to their independence, and he heard Austrians cheer him today as a redeemer.

Before he left for Munich, Hitler reviewed a parade of Austrian and German troops of the now combined army. Several hundred planes roared

Il Duce May Tell Views On Austrian Crisis Today

Rome, March 15 (AP).—Premier Mussolini will address the Chamber of Deputies tomorrow and is expected to tell what he thinks of Germany's absorption of Austria.

Political circles said the speech probably would reveal Il Duce's attitude more accurately than the recent declarations of the grand council.

TVA Foes Halt Norris Effort to Hurry Inquiry

Investigation Is Delayed Pending Another White House Hearing.

House and Senate leaders, finally agreed on the necessity of a joint Congressional investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, devoted their efforts yesterday to quashing attempts to bring up investigation resolutions before Friday, when the President confers again with the three battling TVA directors.

Three times yesterday Senator George W. Norris (Independent), Nebraska, TVA's defender, tried to get the unanimous consent of the Senate to requests concerning his resolution for a Senate investigation. The first time he merely asked unanimous consent that the Senate consider his resolution.

Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, chief Senate foe of the TVA, objected.

Objections Block Action.

Then Norris asked unanimous consent that the Senate make his resolution the next order of business after disposition of the reorganization bill.

To this, Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, the minority leader, objected.

Then Norris asked that his resolution be referred to the Senate Audit Committee with instructions to report it back within five days. To this Bridges objected. Then Norris, his black eyebrows arched in sardonic amusement, said dryly:

"I was simply trying to ascertain if the Senator from New Hampshire wanted an investigation or a mud-slinging contest. Having ascertained that, I have nothing further to say."

Bridges and Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, already joint authors of one resolution seeking a Senate inquiry into TVA, yesterday introduced a new resolution "cutting in" the House on the publicity certain to be focused on the investigators. Their latest resolution proposed the appointment of a joint committee of five members of each house, and was supported in the lower chamber by Representative Andrew J. May (Democrat), Kentucky, avowed frend of the private utilities and enemy of the TVA.

TVA Debated in House.

House debate flashed over the TVA situation briefly yesterday when Representative Thomas Jenkins (Republican), Ohio, insisted a TVA inquiry would show TVA Chairman Arthur E. Morgan to be the "same honorable high-class man" his friends have known him to be in the past.

Another Republican, Representative Leo E. Allen, of Pennsylvania, declared the TVA was "the most corrupt agency in the Government, or any government in the world," and Representative Jerry Voorhis (Democrat), California, answered by asserting the inquiry would show TVA to be "as clean as a hound's tooth."

Senator Robert J. Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, issued a statement yesterday "heartily" indorsing a TVA investigation on the ground that many Ohioans had written him asking that Chairman Morgan be given every opportunity to "make known his grievances."

Grape Leads 3,000 Businessmen Favoring D. C. Subway, Racing

THEODORE S. GRAPE.

Federation President, Whose Secret Ambition Is to Become Railroad Executive, Considers District's Privilege Tax Unjust.

By Christine Sadler

Theodore S. Grape, dynamic president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations in Washington, started out in life hoping to become a railroad president.

Instead, he is president of an investment house which bears his name, president of the Bearings Sales Corporation and the new president of the Congressional Country Club.

These four presidencies, however, are not enough to shake his early ambitions. He still hopes to head a railroad!

Grape has led the businessmen during the past two years, which have been "troublous times haunted by the irritation which grows out of unjust taxation." Which is what members of his association have thought about the business privilege tax in the District since the first time anybody mentioned it.

The Federation of Businessmen is six years old and has a membership of around 3,000. While being mostly the voice of the "little businessman," it also takes in important banks and corporations. "We are open to anybody who is in business, whether he runs a one-man barber shop or owns a whole telephone company," the president says.

Membership of the federation is scattered among 11 separate businessmen's associations, which operate in various business areas of the city as follows: Georgetown, Southeast, Cleveland Park, Brookland-Woodridge, Connecticut Avenue, Columbia Heights, Central, Northeast, Georgia Avenue, New Center Market and North Seventh Street, a baby member. Each sends five delegates and five alternates to the federation, which meets monthly at the Hamilton Hotel, with one of the associations as host.

The federation is on record in favor of a subway system for the District, legalizing horse racing, a New Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, a National Guard Armory, a municipal stadium, extension of the boys' club movement, a new highway artery through Georgetown into Virginia, various "bottleneck improvements to better the trarffic flow," and free trash collection.

Its members are positive that if the Federal Government paid a "just share of District expenses, additional taxes would be unnecessary." If a just share is not forthcoming, however, they believe a sales tax would be more nearly just to the District than a tax on gross business receipts.

Although taking no special stand as one body on the question of suffrage in the District, individual members work with numerous local government groups. A majority of them apparently favor national representation more than strictly local suffrage, and believe that if a "constitutional amendment is necessary to secure it the States of the Nation will be willing to help us out."

Grape is one of those Middle Westerners whose energy and accomplishments make the rest of the world look lazy. He worked at railroading for 12 years, as city ticket agent out of Chicago. Then he changed his occupation and became an efficiency engineer. When the World War came along he joined up as a member of the Engineer Corps and served overseas for 18 months.

He came to Washington in 1920 to organize the Bearings Sales Corporation, and soon interested himself in the civic affairs of the city. Because of his 11-year-old son, he is particularly interested in the work being done in boys' clubs—but any good civic movement can enlist his support.

He is vice president and welfare chairman of the Reciprocity Club, vice chairman of the Red Cross roll call, chairman of the depositors committee of the U. S. Savings Bank, and one of the board of managers of the District A. A. U.

Although a recent illness kept him in the hospital for more than a month, there is no indication his pace is slowing down. He loves golf, football games, wrestling matches, and all movie stars—especially Myrna Loy. His major luxury is neckties, and he likes them vivid. His friendliness and good-comradeship qualities attract many loyal friends. They call him "Ted."

On Friday—Milton R. Vollmer, secretary of the Federation of Business Men's Associations, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

U. S. Curtails Expenditures on Its Diplomatic Building in Vienna and Shanghai.

The United States has already begun to curtail expenditures on its diplomatic buildings in Vienna and Shanghai, it was stated yesterday by Chairman McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

McReynolds' committee approved a bill to cancel the remainder of a $750,000 sum allocated for construction of Government offices in Shanghai and authorized its expenditure in Havana, Lima, Panama and Rio de Janeiro. McReynolds stated that a $50,000 contract for improving the residence of the American Minister in Vienna was canceled on Monday.

John Harrington, counsel for the Illinois Manufacturers Association, and A. P. Haake, managing director of the National Association of Manufacturers, opposed yesterday the Borah-O'Mahoney bill for Federal licensing of corporations in interstate commerce.

Harrington told a Senate Judiciary sub-committee the bill was a "remedy worse than the disease." Haake, former professor of economics at the University of Wisconsin and Rutgers College, said the bill was another step toward building "monopoly by government." Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, coauthor of the measure told Harrington he "was seeing spooks" and added, "where they don't exist."

A bill modernizing the food and drug law of 1906 and extending it to cover cosmetics and minor commodities and devices never before subject to Federal regulation, was approved yesterday by the House Interstate Comerce Committee. The measure would require special labeling for habit-forming drugs.

Chairman Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, of the Senate Agriculture Committee, received a letter yesterday from Secretary of Agriculture Wallace suggesting Congress enact legislation authorizing immediate disbursement of $30,000,000 in cotton-price-adjustment payments to growers who agree to comply with the 1938 crop program.

Smith had proposed immediate payment of growers with cotton under loan, upon surrender of their loan cotton, and subsequent payment to other cotton growers. The Comptroller General ruled there should be no discrimination between the two classes of growers. So Secretary Wallace's compromise proposal will probably be accepted.

HELP STOMACH DIGEST FOOD
Without Laxatives—and You'll Eat Everything from Soup to Nuts
The stomach should digest two pounds of food daily. When you eat heavy, greasy, coarse or rich foods or when you are nervous, hurried or chew poorly—your stomach pours out too much fluid. Your food doesn't digest and you have gas, heartburn, nausea, pain or sour stomach. You feel sour, sick and upset all over.
Doctors say never take a laxative for stomach pain. It is dangerous and foolish. It takes those little black tablets called Bell-ans for Indigestion to make the excess stomach fluids harmless, relieve distress in 5 minutes and put you back on your feet. Relief is so quick it is amazing and one 25c package proves it. Ask for Bell-ans for Indigestion.

Farm Bureau Urges British Trade Treaty

O'Neal Says Pact Offers a Great Opportunity to Agriculture.

By the Associated Press.

The Administration's proposal to negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement with Great Britain received the enthusiastic support yesterday of the American Farm Bureau Federation, one of the Nation's largest agricultural organizations.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the federation, told the Committee for Reciprocity Information that the pact "offers the greatest opportunity to aid American agriculture of any trade agreement we have thus far concluded."

Spokesmen for the American Federation of Labor and Eastern industrialists, however, assailed proposals to make tariff concessions to Great Britain and contended lowering of import duties on textiles and similar products of large American industries would threaten domestic jobs and wages.

Michael F. Flynn, representing the A. F. of L., said the federation opposed entry of any foreign product at less than the cost of American production.

He said his organization had no interest in any particular items, but was interested solely in providing for America's workers, and enhancing their purchasing power.

Margaret F. Stone, of the National Women's Trade Union League of America, declared in support of the proposed treaty that "the country can't have prosperity without a sound foreign trade."

Consumers May Benefit.

Mrs. Harris T. Baldwin, of the National League of Women Voters, said "consumers stand to benefit from an agreement with the United Kingdom because prices may be reduced on specific commodities on which tariff rates are lowered whether or not they are produced in this country."

Representatives of Eastern industrial areas, particularly in New England, urged the committee not to grant tariff concessions on industrial products which would effect American producers.

The Eastern representatives included Massachusetts officials and businessmen, Gov. Robert E. Quinn of Rhode Island, and nine members of Congress.

Government trade experts agreed to undertake settlement with Canada of preferential freight rates American shippers contend discriminated against the Great Lakes and Eastern ports.

Hull Removal Sought.

Boston, March 15 (AP).—Former Representative Alexander F. Sullivan (Democrat), filed in the Massachusetts House today a resolution which would ask President Roosevelt to remove Secretary of State Cordell Hull because of Hull's sponsorship of trade treaties. Sullivan recently announced he would run for Lieutenant Governor.

Boys' Club Drive To Start Sunday

Pastors of Washington churches will launch a three-week drive Sunday for $75,000 to finance activities of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club, it was announced yesterday.

Maj. Robert A McClure, U. S. A., vice president in charge of club membership, said that pastors of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant churches will discuss the work of the Boys' Club in their sermons.

McClure said that volunteer workers for the campaign would begin at the same time to solicit contributions from 140,000 residents of Washington.

Roosevelt 'Delighted' Over Va. Housing Law

President Roosevelt was "particularly delighted" over passage of the Virginia law enabling slum clearance projects in that State and "pleased that Virginia passed old age pensions," State Senator C. J. Harkrader, Bristol, Va., publisher, said after a visit to the White House.

Senator Harkrader said the President expressed his admiration for the leadership of Gov. Price and that he found "the President had closely followed the doings" of the Virginia General Assembly.

The Gallup Poll

Public Sentiment for Trade Treaties May Change Republican Policy.

By DR. GEORGE GALLUP.
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 15.—Secretary Hull's proposal to negotiate a reciprocal trade treaty with England is favored by an overwhelming majority of American Institute of Public Opinion. Hearings on the British trade pact opened Monday in Washington.

George Gallup

The surveys also reveal the highly significant fact that majority of voters in the Republican Party—the party which has consistently favored high tariffs—today approve reciprocal tariff reductions with England, even though this policy is one fostered by a Democratic Secretary of State.

The revelation of a basic change in Republican sentiment may lead the party into a complete about-face in its historic attitude toward tariffs.

The Institute made two nation-wide studies on the reciprocal treaty issue, using two different questions. The first question was put to a complete cross-section of voters throughout the country; the second to another cross-section. The two questions were:

"Do you approve of Secretary Hull's policy in seeking a reciprocal trade agreement with Great Britain?"

"If Great Britain reduces tariffs on American goods should we reduce tariffs on British goods?"

The national vote on the two questions was identical.

Favor Hull's Policy?

Yes	73%
No	27

Favor Mutual Tariff Cuts?

Yes	73%
No	27

The dramatic manner in which the reciprocal trade issue cuts across party lines is indicated by the fact that large majorities of Republican voters joined the Democrats in voting "yes" to both questions.

Among Democrats the vote on Hull's policy of seeking a trade agreement was 79 per cent in favor, 21 per cent opposed; among Republicans 61 per cent in favor, 39 per cent opposed.

On the second question—mutual tariff reductions—Republicans and Democrats were in even closer agreement. The vote was: Democrats favoring tariff cuts, 76 per cent, opposed 24 per cent; Republicans favoring tariff cuts 66 per cent, opposed 34 per cent.

Vote Concerns Principle.

It should be borne in mind, however, that the results given above are a vote on the principle of a British trade agreement and not on the details of any treaty. It is entirely possible that opposition to specific items in a trade agreement will come from workers and other population groups who consider themselves economically affected by tariff reductions.

In fact, a number of textile labor unions have already expressed fear that a British agreement might hurt the textile business by reducing duties on English cloth.

British Voters For U. S. Trade Treaty.

London, March 15.—The British Institute of Public Opinion, affiliate of the American Institute, reports an overwhelming majority of British voters in favor of a reciprocal trade treaty with the United States.

A national study conducted by the British Institute showed 96 per cent in favor of the treaty, only 4 per cent opposed.

Hearings Finished On 3-Judges Bill

House hearings were concluded yesterday on a bill to increase justices in the United States District Court for Washington by three, and Representative Citron (Democrat), of Connecticut, said that a report will be made to the Judiciary Committee this week.

Justice Jesse C. Adkins and Justice F. Dickinson Letts spoke in favor of the increase, as did Bolitha J. Laws, president of the District Bar Association; Charles E. Stewart, clerk of the court, and Alexander Holtzoff, special assistant to the Attorney General.

A Senate sub-committee late week reported a similar bill, but reduced new justices to two for the United States District Court and one for the District Court of Appeals.

New Zoning Law Wins Committee

A favorable report on the proposed new zoning law for the District was indicated yesterday by Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, as he concluded hearings on the bill.

Senator Overton said some amendments may be adopted, including one by himself to authorize the board of adjustments to affirm, modify or reverse granting of a building permit by the building inspector.

Amendment of the bill so as not to give the zoning board power to abolish nonconforming commercial property rights was urged by Joseph Low, an attorney; Thomas B. Weigel, of the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association, and George A. Corbett, president of the Manor Park Citizens Association.

Charles F. Consaul, of the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association, and Robert E. Lynch, lawyer, spoke in favor of the legislation.

U. S. Stiffening On Philippines And Far East

Roosevelt Denies Early Shift But Navy Plans Reinforcements.

By the United Press.

Reversal of Administration policy in the Far East, embracing possible abandonment of independence for the Philippines and a stiffer attitude toward Japanese domination of Asia, appeared imminent last night, although President Roosevelt said at his press conference that there was no thought of immediate change in the islands' political status.

Mr. Roosevelt said the address Monday night by Paul V. McNutt, High Commissioner to the Philippines, urging indefinite extension of the islands' commonwealth status, did not presage anything sensational.

But he added significantly that there are many people who believe the problem should be reinvestigated.

His statement followed a series of rapid-fire developments which baffled Congress and led some observers to conclude that a drastic change in policy is in the making. They included:

1. Indorsement by Chairman Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, regarded as the Administration spokesman in Congress, of "re-examination of our political relations" with the Philippines.

2. A statement by Philippine President Manuel Quezon at Manila announcing his willingness to re-examine the "whole independence question" immediately in the interests of peace in the Pacific and economic welfare of the Filipino people.

3. A move by Administration leaders in the House to beat down rapidly growing sentiment for amendment of the policy section of the billion-dollar super-Navy bill to prohibit American warships from crossing well-defined lines in mid-Atlantic and mid-Pacific except in case of attack on the United States, its possessions or any Latin American country.

4. It was learned that high Administration officials are studying tentative plans for greatly increasing American military and naval forces in the Philippines.

Representative Maury Maverick (Democrat), Texas, leader of the House liberal bloc, issued a formal statement declaring that retention of the Philippines would mean that the United States is committing itself to a policy of maintaining "white supremacy in the Far East and helping Britain protect its $2,000,000,000 investment in China."

Lewis Attacks Failure to Stop BusinessSlump

C. I. O. Head, in Address, Blames Government and Industry.

By the Associated Press.

John L. Lewis assailed both Government and industry yesterday for what he termed their failure to produce any plan for ending the business recession.

"America is moving in economic reverse," the C. I. O. leader said in a short wave broadcast to Great Britain. The broadcast was one of a series arranged by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

"Our consumer goods industries began to slow down in June, 1937, and by October of the same year our heavy industries began to feel the icy hand of the depression . . . .

"In the months that have ensued, neither industry nor Government has come forth with constructive proposals designed to meet the problems of the depression.

"The Federal Congress, lacking adequate or competent leadership, in continuous session for months past, has failed to devise or enact a single statute that would cause a glimmer of hope to penetrate the mist of millions of despairing Americans.

"Meanwhile, cavilling and confusion prevails and our statesmen, and those carrying the responsibilities of the nation's manifold enterprises, are reviling each other with an anger and bitterness that defiles, sears and destroys.

"Meanwhile, the population suffers and a creeping paralysis progressively impairs its functions.

"What is to be done? Reason calls for a change. More rational policies are indicated. America is menaced, not by a foreign foe that would storm its battlements, but by the more fearful enemy of domestic strife and savagery."

"It is time for Americans to cooperate . . .

"It is time for capital to recognize labor's right to live and participate in the increased efficiency of industry and the bounties of our national resources.

"It is time for labor to recognize the right of capital to have a reasonable return upon its investment.

"It is time for statesmen to recognize their Nation's peril and to decide to co-operate with labor and industry, to rationalize the Nation's processes and alleviate a Nation's distress."

Court Liberates Dishpan Angel in Heavenly Battle

An attempt to clip "Angel" Acrie Walker's wings ended unsuccessfully in Police Court yesterday, when Acrie was found not guilty of disturbing a religious service.

Acrie was locked up Monday by police summoned to the House of Prayer, 601 M street northwest, when Acrie holds the office of "angel" and also washes dishes in the kitchen.

Monday, according to testimony heard before Judge Hobart Newman, Acrie was busy washing dishes, unaware that she had been summoned to a hearing before the "Soldiers of Peace," disciplinary and judiciary officers of the congregation.

Irked at her absence the "soldiers" sought her in the kitchen, and a mild uproar ensued.

Judge Newman agreed that Acrie had been more sinned against than sinning.

Library Aide Hurt When Hit by Car of Argentine Attache

Pierre duBois, 58, 6622 First street northwest, was injured slightly yesterday when he was knocked down by an automobile registered to Sabo H. Sueyro, attache of the Argentine Embassy.

DuBois, an assistant at the Army Medical Library, was struck while crossing F street in the 1300 block. Taken to Emergency Hospital, he was given first aid for a bruised chest and cuts to his arms.

Police said the automobile was driven by Manuel Merchan, 29, 1320 Eighteenth street northwest, chauffer at the embassy. Brakes on the limousine were tested by police and found to be adequate. No police action will be taken, according to Capt. Harvey Callahan, of the First Police Precinct.

Rep. Parsons Gets A Second Delay in Auto Crash Trial

The traffic trial of Representative Claude V. Parsons (Democrat), of Illinois, scheduled for 1 p. m. today, has been postponed for three weeks at the request of Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, it was learned last night.

Accused of leaving after colliding, Parsons agreed to appear in Traffic Court today when he was arraigned before Judge Hobart Newman on March 3. Yesterday, however, a new continuance was granted by Judge John P. McMahon, now sitting in the traffic branch of Police Court.

According to Assistant Corporation Counsel John O'Dea, the postponement order came from his chief at the District Building. Attorney Alvin Newmyer, representing Margaret Ellis, 2603 Connecticut avenue northwest, who claimed Parsons struck her car, said he was notified of the delay, but that he was "ready to go to trial."

Moves Studied If Italy, Reich Unite for War

Plan of Action Discussed by Both Britain and France.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 15.—Great Britain and France both studied counter measures tonight to a possible Italo-German secret military alliance involving a Nazi-Fascist bargain over Austria and the Mediterranean.

Aides of Prime Minister Chamberlain drafted plans for expansion of Britain's already towering rearmament to be presented at a vital cabinet meeting tomorrow.

The House of Commons rejected, 253 to 139, a motion expressing dissatisfaction with air rearmament. The vote gave the government rallying support for an armaments boost, a victory on the issue raised by Laborite charges that Britain is sadly behind Germany both in the number of her fighting planes and her capacity to build them.

Inquiry Rejected.

The House also voted, 143 to 92, signifying approval of Chamberlain's rejection of a Labor request for an inquiry into air rearmament.

Sir Thomas Inskip, minister for defense co-ordination, promised the House that by March, 1939, Great Britain would have 1,750 entirely modern planes.

Although the air estimates for 1938 already call for the unprecedented sum of £111,502,000 ($557,510,000), it was indicated in the House of Commons today there will be later supplementary estimates.

The debate brought charges of negligence and inefficiency against the air ministry and a bristling Laborite attack on Viscount Swinton, air secretary.

The government was known to be worried about the possibility of an Italian-German military pact and the consequences such an alliance would have.

Silent on Czech Issue.

Chamberlain, who yesterday condemned Germany's action in Austria, took another slap at German methods when he said he was opposed to imitating them by regimenting Britain for the production of arms.

"We may have to," he told the House of Commons, "but we will not do it until we are convinced nothing else will serve our purpose."

The prime minister declined to give a further statement on foreign policy, particularly on what the British government would do if Germany were to march into Czechoslovakia.

Weaker Soviet Seen.

Tokyo, March 16 (Wednesday) (AP). Japanese newspapers were unanimous today in asserting German pressure on Russia would increase, following absorption of Austria, causing Soviet influence to wane in the Far East.

Former Bank Clerk Is Leader Of Czechoslovakian Germans

Konrad Henlein, Who Gained Influence Through Gymnastic Clubs, Scorns a Seat in Parliament.

By the Associated Press.

Lanky Konrad Henlein is the man of the hour to Germans in Czechoslovakia.

Leader of the Sudeten (south) German Party and foremost champion of the 3,500,000 Germans in this country, he followed Reichfuehrer Adolf Hitler's Austrian coup with the statement:

"The rights of Germans in Czechoslovakia will prevail against all obstacles."

His New Year's Day prediction that the Sudeten German question would remain one of the major European issues in 1938 appeared to be coming true in view of Hitler's determination to bring racial Germans beyond Germany's borders into his fold sooner or later.

Premier Milan Hodza has countered with the statement that Germans in this nation are receiving the same consideration and rights as all Czech citizens.

Henlein is not among the 44 Sudeten Germans in the Chamber of Deputies.

He prefers to direct his campaign for German elements from outside of Parliament, leaving his deputy friends to voice the party's claim for autonomy.

Now 39, Henlein was an obscure instructor of gymnastics at Asch up to 1933, when Hitler took power in Germany.

He had fought as a youth with the Austrians in the World War, was wounded and taken prisoner by Italian forces in 1918, and was a bank clerk after his repatriation.

It was not until 1925, however, that he found his true vocation as a gymnastic instructor—training the younger generation to become men of muscle.

So popular did he become that he acquired control of German clubs in the country—and from there his mind turned to politics.

It was on October 1, 1933, that he issued a public manifesto calling for all Germans to unite in a "Sudeten German Heimat Front"—the name being taken from the Sudetic Mountain region where he was born.

That organization became the Sudeten German Party and Henlein became a factor to be reckoned with in central European politics.

Himmler Acts As Hitler's 'Eye' Over All Reich

Young Police Chief Must Know More Than Any Other Nazi.

By the Associated Press.

Heinrich Himmelr's job is to know more about what's happening in Germany than any other Nazi, including Adolf Hitler himself.

He is chief of all German police—political police and undercover secret police—the man to keep his ear to the ground and inform Der Fuehrer.

He played a large part in suppressing the June, 1934, revolt and sat as one of the judges who condemned the Storm Troopers and others to death by the firing squad.

Himmler is a close companion of Hitler. He is also supreme commander of the Blackshirt Schutz-Staffel, Der Fuehrer's most trusted guards.

He is young. He became head of the Blackshirt S S troops when he was 29 and political police chief when he was 33.

Himmler wears eyeglasses and looks to be much older than he is, not yet 38.

He attached himself to Hitler soon after the World War, in which he served as a standard bearer in a Bavarian infantry regiment.

He became a Nazi while studying agriculture in Munich. When Hitler's abortive beer cellar putsch came in 1923, he had a minor post in the Bavarian war ministry. Two years later he became a district leader and in 1929 Hitler named him supreme commander of the "S S" troops.

A year later he was elected a Nazi deputy to the Reichstag.

Netherlands to Hold Troops With Colors

Amsterdam, The Netherlands, March 15 (AP).—Prime Minister Hendrikus Colijn broadcast an appeal to The Netherlands tonight to keep calm in the face of international developments.

He announced at the same time, however, that the 1938 troop levy, scheduled to return home March 25, would continue to serve with the colors until next October because of the gravity of the situation.

"God shield The Netherlands and Europe from another Armageddon," he added.

President Views Austria Still As Independent

Refuses to Recognize Hitler's Conquest in Czech Pact.

President Roosevelt yesterday clearly indicated that he does not propose to be stampeded into recognizing or taking any official notice of Adolf Hitler's seizure of Austria, irrespective of what the future course of this Government may be.

Despite the fact that Monday night German Ambassador Hans H. Dieckhoff formally notified the State Department that Austria had become a part of the German Reich, Mr. Roosevelt yesterday in proclaiming the Czechoslovakian trade agreement included Austria as an independent nation, along with other sovereign powers. Moreover, he granted the benefits of the Czechoslovak agreement to Austria and withheld them from Germany—due to reasons other than the coup d'etat of the last weekend.

At his press conference Mr. Roosevelt was asked when he signed this document referring to Austria. He said he did so yesterday morning—some hours after the visit of the German Ambassador to the Secretary of State. Had Austria ceased to exist as far as this Government was concerned, the President was asked.

Mr. Roosevelt said he had just been discussing that subject with Secretary of State Hull. Legally, on the basis of international law, he continued, this Government could not reach such a conclusion because it had received no announcement from Austria or that country's minister here that Austria had ceased to be independent. He said he understood the German Ambassador had so informed the State Department—but he did not think any further comment was necessary.

In the event this country received such word direct from Austrian officials, would this Government close its legation in Vienna, the President was asked. Mr. Roosevelt replied he did not propose to suppose anything regarding future developments. He suggested that further inquiries along this line be made at the State Department when developments occurred.

No Change in Plans.

In reply to another question, the President said that the events of the last few days in Europe would not necessitate any change in this country's present defense plans.

The State Department, without comment, made public a translation of the note which the German Ambassador handed to Secretary Hull Monday night. The note commenced by referring to instructions "to notify your excellency of the following law of March 13, 1938, concerning the reunion of Austria with the German Reich." The law which followed made a part of the law of the German Reich the decree adopted by the puppet Austrian government at Vienna on Sunday.

The State Department gave the following translation to article 1 of that decree: "Austria is a state (land) of the German Reich." This decree also set April 10 as the date for a plebiscite of "German men and women of Austria over 20 years of age on the reunion with the German Reich."

Pact Evidence of Attitude.

Dieckhoff's note concluded with this statement: "The former Austrian diplomatic representatives in foreign countries have received the order to place themselves, along with their personnel, under the German representatives." Though word of this order has been received by Austrian Minister Edgar Prochnik, he has not called at the State Department to relinquish his status here.

It was generally believed that this Government would not take cognizance of any change in the status of Austria until after the plebiscite in April. Inclusion of Austria in the Czechoslovakian proclamation was taken as evidence of this attitude.

Frenzied Vienna Cheers Hitler As Armies Combine in Parade

March of 25,000 Is Best-Disciplined Military Show in City's History; Von Papen Stands at Saluting Fuehrer's Side.

By the United Press.

Vienna, March 15.—A million frenzied Viennese massed around famed Heroes Monument today, cheering, saluting and some of them fainting, as Adolf Hitler, his face glowing with pride, reviewed the mightiest parade in Vienna's history.

More than 25,000 steel-helmeted soldiers—black-shirted Nazi Storm Troopers, goose-stepping Sappers from Warzburg and crack Viennese "Deutsch Meister" regiments—thundered past the reviewing stand while the new "Fuehrer of all the Germans" stood with rigid arm upraised under the shadow of the 63-foot statue of Marie Therese.

War invalids watched the parade from stretchers, wildly cheering Austrians packed into Heldenplatz, around the great "Burg Gate" of conquerors, to roar a tribute to the one-time Austrian corporal who had joined their country to the German Reich without firing a shot.

Out of the sky roared giant German bombers, power diving over famous Ring boulevard, and on the ground Austrian units swept by with German tank divisions thundering after them.

Viennese described it as "the most impressive and best-disciplined mechanized military parade in the history of Vienna." Excitement was even more intense than yesterday when Hitler greeted the Viennese throngs that chered his entry into the city.

He passed through streets banked with thousands of cheering people, chanting German and Viennese songs, on the route from the Imperial Hotel to the Heroes Monument, opposite the great "Burg Tor" or "Conquerors Gate."

Beside him stood Franz von Papen, one-time chancellor of the Reich, dressed in the uniform of the Dusseldorf Uhlans. Austrian and German military leaders flanked the Fuehrer, as he stood for 40 minutes, immobile as a statue, saluting flags of Austrian and German regiments as they dipped before him.

Austrian bands, blaring "Deutsch Ist Die Saar," led the parade, and Hitler's rigid face relaxed into a half smile as he heard the familiar air.

Armored cars, motorized units that crossed the frontier last Saturday, roared along the boulevard. The shrill whistle of the Prussian "marching song" rose above the rumble of trucks and the steady undertone of marching feet.

Then came the black-uniformed Nazi storm troopers, the so-called "political soldiers" which form the backbone of German secret police.

A plane shot out of the sky, zooming perilously low, and dropped a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

It was notable that the Austrian units—such as the Koeniggraetz regiment that was almost wiped out by the Prussians in 1866—marched less snappily than the German troops.

Gen. Von Bock, new commander of the Austro-German army, rode past on horseback, with his staff behind, to the tune of the "Torgauer March," celebrating a victory of Frederick the Great over the Austrians.

The crowd roared loudest when the Austrian Uhlans, wearing the eagle and swastika on their breasts, rode past to the tune of "Prinz Eugen," commemorating the defender of Vienna against the Turks.

The Fuehrer's arm pumped up and down in rigid salutes without a stop for 40 minutes. At the close of the parade he descended from the "honor platform" and entered a car an hour and 35 minutes after he had arrived.

Palmisano Foes to Force Report On Gaming Bill

Fight Forecast; Chairman May Be Overridden by Majority.

A lively battle between members of the House District Committee and their chairman, Representative Palmisano (Democrat), of Maryland, is expected today over the bill to broaden authority of police and prosecutors in suppressing the numbers racket.

Public hearings were concluded on the measure yesterday, after a rather stormy session, and all indications were that the majority of members were ready to report the legislation favorably at once.

Chairman Palmisano, however, balked a move to report it immediately and said he did not believe the committee would be ready to act at the regular meeting today. Other members, however, were enlisting support to override the chairman.

Palmisano Stands Pat.

Palmisano reiterated belief that the bill should be amended to curtail authority of police to make raids on suspicion of gambling. He said he will make a fight for this revision before the measure is reported.

While there was talk at the hearing of amending the bill to make it conform to the New York statute, the idea appeared to have been abandoned yesterday. Indications are the measure will be reported in substantially the same form as it passed the Senate with the possible exception that mandatory jail sentences may be substituted for fines on first-offense convictions.

Wilbur La Roe, jr., speaking for the Washington Federation of Churches, yesterday assailed the numbers racket and charged that gambling locally is drawing criminals here from other cities.

Schulte Quits Palmisano.

"The gamblers are drawn here by the enormous profits involved," he said. "The prostitutes are drawn here to be with their gambling friends. The paid murderers are drawn here to do away with rival gamblers."

At the hearing Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, came out in favor of the bill after previously siding with Chairman Palmisano. When the chairman expressed surprise, Schulte said: "I reserve the right to change my mind at any time."

Capt. George M. Little, head of the police squad, told the sub-committee that if the antinumbers bill is enacted into law "we can do almost as good a job as Mr. Dewey did in New York."

Reformers Blamed.

He said that since he had taken charge of the vice squad more than 100 formerly barricaded gambling joints had been raided and put out of business and two "big shots," Sam Beard and Dutch Irwin, had been sent to the penitentiary.

Two witnesses spoke in opposition to the bill. They were Richard Grace, of the Government Printing Office, and George H. Rycraw, colored, administrator of the New Negro Alliance, Inc.

Grace predicted that the law could never be enforced if passed.

"The people who want this bill are the reform element," he said. "They don't believe people ought to take a drink or gamble and they want to enforce their views by legislation."

Church Safe Wrecked, $15 Stolen by Yeggmen

Yeggmen early yesterday broke open the safe in the Metropolitan Baptist Church, 225 R street northwest, and stole $15. The theft was discovered by the Rev. Ernest C. Smith, colored, pastor of the church, who told police the church was entered apparently by use of a duplicate key.

The safe was taken from the office on the first floor of the church to the basement, where it was battered open with a sledge hammer. A filing cabinet also was broken into but nothing was taken.

Sea Hero Held For Bombing of Police Station

Blast Injured Friend of Morro Castle Radio Expert.

By the Associated Press.

Bayonne, N. J., March 15.—George W. Rogers, 41-year-old policeman, who was decorated for heroism in the Morro Castle disaster, was arrested today and accused of planting a home-made bomb which blew up at police headquarters and seriously injured Lieut. Vincent J. Doyle.

Rogers, decorated for his work as chief radio operator of the ship which burned and sank off the New Jersey coast with heavy loss of life in 1934, was assistant to Doyle, head of the police radio system.

He was locked up on charges of attempt to kill and of atrocious assault and battery. He vigorously declared he was innocent.

Doyle lost three fingers of his left hand and his left leg was fractured when a contrivance—called by its sender a "fish tank heater"—exploded in his hand March 4. He is at Bayonne Hospital.

Police said the note attached to the contrivance, asking Doyle to repair the "heater" and test it, was found to be police department paper, and brown tissue in which it was wrapped was found to be similar to paper used at police headquarters.

Rogers had left the radio division repair room a few minutes before the blast, saying he was going to mail a letter, police said.

"I didn't think I had an enemy in the world," Doyle said at the hospital. "It was a good thing Rogers wasn't there. He would have been blown to bits."

Minnie Is Born, 2 Days Early, Into Zoo's Most Famous Family

Mollie, Minnie, Malcolm, Moe;
Now the Zoo's outstanding show.
All dressed up but where to go?
Mollie, Minnie, Malcolm, Moe.

Two days early and as unexpected as the opening of a House of David barber shop, the penguin, which hereafter shall be known as Minnie, broke out of her shell yesterday in the midst of Government pay day and the ides of March.

Brother Malcolm had been 40 days incubating when he emerged last Saturday, but you know how perverse women are. A mere 38 days after Mater Mollie laid the egg, Minnie cracked the shell. Since 7:30 a. m. yesterday there has been another mouth to feed at Chez Penguin.

Malcolm Davis, keeper of the Zoo's birdhouse, got his reward. He was absent Saturday when the first of the two eggs hatched, although he had stood by almost constantly ever since the adult pair began building a nest last January.

Yesterday, however, he was the only one to see Minnie leave her shell, in contrast to the large crowd that ogled Malcolm in the throes of birth. He must have had a hunch. At 5 a. m. Davis left home, in the other end of town at 904 Eleventh street southeast, to see how things where going with the penguins.

But the egg was still intact. The keeper returned home for breakfast. At 7:30 he was back in the birdhouse. Going directly to the nest, he was sprprised and delighted to see chick No. 2 trying to wiggle free from the shell, split cleanly in two, but still clinging to its sides.

Zoo Director William M. Mann thought Minnie would be a good, alliterative name for the newcomer.

Of course, it may turn out that Minnie and Malcolm should exchange names, but that's a mere technicality. The two babies are almost identical in appearance—a tiny mass of black fuzz with conspicuous bills. They are expected to mature slowly and it may be many months before they don the conventional dinner jacket and starched front.

Minnie was not the Zoo's only arrival yesterday. Going on exhibition for the first time were a pair of Australian wild dogs, or dingoes, a giant anteater from South America and 18 tropical fish.

The dingoes are quite tame, about 10 months old, and possess rich tan coats. When fully grown they are about the size of a mature police dog. They are a gift of Bronx Zoological Park.

A Japanese deer was swapped for an anteater, which is about 54 inches long and still growing. It is on display in the monkey house. The dingoes are in the new outcages opposite the lion house.

"HOT BUTTERED RUM T'is just the Chilly Night for it"
said CAPT. LAWRENCE

When other clipper masters called on that hardy Nantucketer, Capt. Ezra Lawrence, he was sure to serve hot buttered rum if the weather were chilly. We got the recipe from his great grandson and it's delicious!

"A good full measure of Virgin Islands rum in a large glass, about a teaspoon of butter, a spoonful of sugar, fill up with very hot water, sprinkle on nutmeg freely."

To make this recipe nowadays, you need Government House Rum, the principal rum from the Virgin Islands. A sound, honest rum, distilled directly from cane juice.

YOUR GUIDE TO GOOD LIQUORS

He's head and shoulders above mere "oil-changers"... because

ONLY YOUR MILEAGE MERCHANT OIL-PLATES YOUR ENGINE

Does Spring begin on March 20th?... or on the 21st? "Begin it today!" pleads your engine. "Bleed out my Winter-poisoned oil. But this Spring help me with more than an oil-change. Change to Your Mileage Merchant! And that's changing to Conoco Germ Processed oil—the only way to change me into an OIL-PLATED engine."

You want this modern exclusive OIL-PLATING because especially in Summer your steady driving demands more than the plain old type of oil-film that slithers OFF the working parts like drops of quicksilver. Exactly the opposite is achieved by the Germ Process—patented. It makes droplets of oil act like a billion tiny suction cups, powerfully attracted and OIL-PLATED to every working surface... Never draining down, never inviting friction, no matter how many thousands of starts and thousands of miles you make all Spring and Summer. And you'll notice Germ Processed oil sticking so close to "Full"—even in older cars—that you'll want to be sticking to Your Mileage Merchant.

the present tunnel at a cost of $125,000 and widen the parkway.

Purchase of a site for a National Guard armory will be postponed at least another year because of the objection of House conferees to the proposed site at the foot of East Capitol street.

Instead of 50 additional policemen, as voted by the Senate, the Metropolitan Police Department will be allowed ten plus the release of a half-dozen policemen now assigned to clerical or special duties.

Laboratory Stays Closed.

An appropriation of $5,000 for a District government reorganization study was restored to the bill with an amendment that it be divided equally between the Senate and House District committees.

The long idle highway department testing laboratory, ordered reopened by the Senate, will remain closed because of "fears" of House conferees that certain road contractors might be given favored treatment.

Inmates of the Children's Receiving Home, which will remain open until January 1, will be transferred to the house of detention in the Woman's Bureau next year after the old Police Court Building is rehabilitated.

The Senate provision which permits the District to buy a site for the Jefferson Junior High School in the southwest, long a bone of contention, without restriction as to location was retained.

While the exact figures on the supply bill will not be available until the conference report is filed in the Senate, probably today, both chairmen said the total will be approximately $47,000,000 and that the deficit to be met by new taxes will be close to $3,500,000.

Several of the amendments will have to be voted on separately in the House and the Senate. The parking meter authorization, while accepted by the House managers, will have to be adopted by the House itself if it remains in the bill. There are indications that it faces strong opposition among the members.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, said that about $100,000 surplus will be left in the highway fund as many of the miscellaneous street improvements written into the bill by the Senate sub-committee were thrown out in conference.

Today the House sub-committee on Fiscal Affairs will meet again in an effort to complete work on the District tax bill before the end of the week.

Reduction of the anticipated deficit by $1,000,000 may lead to a lowering of the income tax scale of 1 to 10 per cent on individuals and 4 to 6 per cent on corporations. It also is expected to result in adoption of a $1.60 minimum realty and personal property tax in place of $1.75.

Lusk Plea Denied.

Rufus Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, yesterday made a last-minute appeal to the sub-committee to substitute the business privilege tax for an income levy in the bill.

There is little likelihood of any change at this stage, however, unless the House refuses to acept the income tax.

The decision of the conferees regarding the relief inquiry represents a distinct victory for the House. Chairmen Thomas and Collins will make the selection of a chief investigator, it was decided, because Senator Glass, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, has been ordered home on account of illness.

Postponement of the filing of the report until August 1 will forestall any move to obtain an additional appropriation in the last general deficiency bill, as Congress may have adjourned long before the investigation has been completed.

The House managers accepted the Senate increase of $5,000 for the inquiry, however, so that $10,000 will be available for the investigation of both the admnistration of the Public Assistance Division and the need for relief along the lines set forth by the Senate sub-committee.

Another last-minute change made in the Senate bill was to strike out an amendment sponsored by Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, to limit the salaries of a police court clerk and his assistant to $3,000.

Sidney R. Katz, of the Washington C. I. O., last night issued a formal statement saying he was "aghast at the turn of events" in the relief inquiry.

"We accepted in good faith the decision of the Senate committee to study Washington's relief needs," he said, "in time for deficiency appropriations to be made before the present Congress adjourns.

"It was upon the basis of this promise that the Citizens Committee on Unemployment and Relief, in which we participated, did not carry its fight for a higher relief appropriation to the floor of the Senate.

"It is difficult for us to believe that such reputable members of the Senate could be contemplating a policy which would mean appalling and slow starvation for thousands of our citizens in this community."

Lindberghs to Live At Kidnap Scene, Paper Is Advised

Plainfield, N. J., March 15 (AP).—The Plainfield Courier News said in a copyrighted article today it learned from a source regarded as authoritative that Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, now en route to England, planned to return to the United States soon and make their permanent home at the Lindbergh estate near Hopewell.

The aviator and his wife abandoned the Sourlands Mountains home shortly after their first-born son, Charles, jr., was kidnaped from his nursery there the night of March 1, 1932. The 600-acre estate was subsequently deeded to a welfare organization for use as a children's home, but no active step has been taken in that direction.

Studies to Save Railways Begun By Roosevelt

tion of railroads now in receiverships.

5. The railroad problem cannot be divorced from the general transportation problem in this country, nor can it be considered independently of the financial questions which it raises.

No specific course of action in seeking to achieve any of these objectives was determined by the conference, the president and chairman, Walter M. W. Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said. Mr. Roosevelt said that as the conference progresses and gets down to details he may find it necessary and desirable to seek legislation at this session of Congress, but he added that he did not know at this time.

This meeting, it was emphasized by both the President and Splawn, was devoted chiefly to the task of diagnosing the railroad problem and discussing it in general terms. Splawn set the pace for the conference when he presented to the President and each of the conferees a report of book-thickness setting forth all aspects of the problem. This report was not made public.

Splawn spent about 15 minutes summarizing the situation presented by his report, which was subsequently pronounced by other participants in the conference as giving a fair and complete picture. Joseph B. Eastman, another I. C. C. member, also outlined to the conference his understanding of the ills and evils from which the railroads are suffering. His account did not greatly differ in essentials from the picture drawn by Splawn, it was reported.

Competition Is Heavy.

The Splawn report pointed out evidence of the sharp competition which the railroads have and a part of it was devoted to the thesis, as subsequently explained by the I. C. C. chairman to the press, that "the trouble with the railroads is that there's more transportation capacity than traffic."

In his press conference the President cited a table of figures from the Splawn report which he interpreted as showing in a surprising way the heavy competitive pressure from other forms of transportation, chiefly buses and trucks on the railroads.

The President recited from the report figures which showed on the basis of annual expenses, depreciation and taxes that rail operations, including steam and electric railroads and bus lines operated by them, paid slightly less than 20 per cent of the total; highway operations, including both publicly and privately operated buses, automobiles and trucks paid 75.5 per cent of the total; waterway operations 4½ per cent; airway operations one-fifth of 1 per cent, and pipeline operations six-tenths of 1 per cent.

Although these figures did not relate to volume of traffic, the President said they indicated the extent to which highway operations had forged ahead in the transportation picture. He said the small figure for airway operations had surprised him when he first heard it.

The President said that no mention was made in the conference of wage reductions at this time for railroad workers. Railway executives last week announced that the inadequacy of the freight rate increases allowed to them by the I. C. C. made it imperative to consider wage cuts at this time.

George Harrison, spokesman in the conference for the railway labor brotherhoods, aserted on leaving the White House that the rail brotherhoods were "unalterably opposed" to any wage cuts and would resist them.

In addition to Splawn, Eastman and Harrison, the conferees included Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau; Senators Burton K. Wheeler and Harry S. Truman, of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee; Chairman Clarence F. Lea, of the House Interstate Commerce Committee; Jesse Jones, RFC chairman; William O. Douglass, SEC chairman; Charles D. Mahaffie, ICC member; Assistant Secretary of Commerce Ernest G. Draper; Director Will W. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration; Henry Bruere, president of the Bowery Savings Bank, of New York, and Carl Gray, vice chairman of the board of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Senators Vote 1-Man Rule of Civil Service

confirmed by the Senate. He would receive $10,000 annually.

Assisting him would be a deputy administrator, appointed by him, but subject to civil service laws. A part-time bi-partisan Civil Service Advisory Board of seven members would be appointed by the President, with power to make investigations and recommendations.

The administrator would wield controls now exercised by the Civil Service Commission and would cooperate in the development and expansion of the merit system and employe-training programs. He would submit plans to the President for a Federal "career service," and he would prescribe "suitable noncompetitive examinations" to be administered to employes covered into the classified civil service under powers given to the President.

For two hours prior to the vote, opponents of the plan argued the authorization would make the administrator a virtual "dictator" of personnel. Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, pointed out that the President has never filled the office of Comptroller General vacated by J. R. McCarl, and asked what would happen if the administrator's office remained unfilled.

Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, brought out that the board of three placed in charge of the Federal Alcohol Administration has never been named, and the office of budget director long remained unfilled.

But Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr. (Progressive), of Wisconsin, called appointment of a single administrator "the greatest step forward in the merit system since the Civil Service was established in 1883.

Approval of the single-administrator plan was a personal victory for Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, who took over management of the reorganization bill fight in the Senate on the death of the late Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Byrnes.

Byrnes Claims Victory.

Byrnes presented a drastically modified bill to the Senate and has hammered for days in defense of one-man Civil Service control. Following defeat of the Walsh amendment yesterday, he jubilantly forecast passage of the bill in virtually its present form, and asserted opponents had reached the peak of their strength.

But the fight against the bill opened with renewed vigor immediately following the vote. Several Senators who had opposed the Walsh amendment, including Senator Alva B. Adams, of Colorado, and Homer T. Bone, of Washington, Democrats, rallied to oral support of the Wheeler amendment to require Congressional approval of reorganization orders.

Also taking the floor with Wheeler in support of his plan were Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Iowa; Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, and Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, Democrats.

Senate Majority Leader Barkley battled alongside of Senator Byrnes in support of proposed reorganization powers for the President and in opposition to the Wheeler amendment.

Borah protested that Congress by delegating its own power to reorganize the Government to the President, is conveying the public impression that it is incompetent to deal with such matters.

Senator Glass said Congress has "confessed that over and over again, that we have not the ability to do things which the Constitution charges us with doing."

Henry's Position Cited.

When Barkley sought to show that Congress had delegated more significant powers than reorganization, citing reciprocal trade agreements as an example, Glass said that "because we have done it before, is no reason we should do it again."

The Virginian recalled that Patrick Henry came within 17 votes of defeating Virginia's ratification of the Constitution because it did not provide that the House or Representatives, should participate in approval or rejection of treaties.

"I wonder," said Glass, "what he would think if he were alive today and found that the Senate had distinctly repudiated its constitutional powers and turned them over to a minor officer of the Government to do with as he pleased, and we do not know anything about it until it is done."

Byrnes argued that the Wheeler amendment was "unconstitutional" because it fixed a time when both houses must vote on joint resolutions approving the President's reorganization orders. He said the Constitution gave both houses power to make their own rules, and the amendment transgressed them. Wheeler replied that "the answer is simply that both houses in approving this provision are amending their rules.

Byrnes and Barkley contended the Wheeler amendment was merely "an invitation for the President to make reorganization recommendations," a power which he already has.

Tax Revision Action Hastened By Senate Finance Committee

Tax

In a powerful leadership role. His views are expected to be those of the committee majority and any significant Administration fight on his methods apparently will have to come on the Senate floor. A large majority of the committee already is on record in informal polls against retention of any vestige of the undivided profits tax, and sentiment for a flat tax on capital gains is widespread.

More than 50 representatives of individual business concerns and organizations have asked to be heard, but the time of some may be clipped to five or ten minutes. He has invited witnesses to save time by "writing out" their statements and submitting them for the committee record. Committeemen are hopeful of sending the bill to the Senate floor sometime next week.

Harrison told reporters that any Treasury estimates based on March 15 returns or current conditions are not likely to be controlling, as a pick-up in business, influenced by tax reform, may "change the whole picture."

"The whole object," he said, "is to get business back to work and to create more confidence. To the degree we accomplish this, the greater will be the flow of revenue into the Treasury."

In disclosing he had called on the Treasury to estimate "the loss of revenue, if any," from scaling down the individual income surtax brackets now ranging between 60 and 75 per cent. Harrison did not say what specific rates were proposed. He believes individual surtaxes may have reached the point of diminishing returns.

"I think we can get some revenue if we bring down the surtax rates," he said.

Throughout the morning, the committee heard Undersecretary of the Treasury Boswell Magill and Arthur H. Kent, an assistant Treasury counsel, discuss the provisions of the House tax bill. Kent is understood to have favored the sliding scale of capital gains taxes voted by the House.

In the afternoon, tall, white-haired Paul V. McNutt, High Commissioner of the Philippines, appeared briefly before the committee. The House bill provides that residents of the Philippines and other possessions shall pay taxes only on revenue received from sources in the United States. McNutt approved this provision but asked that it be made retroactive to cover earlier tax collections.

After Austria, Spain?

After Austria, where will Hitler strike next? That is the question asked on all sides. And the answer most frequently given points to Czechoslovakia.

That last remaining island of democracy in central Europe is unquestionably in dire peril. But the Czechs' evident determination to resist invasion by force, and the French pledge to help them if invaded, may postpone, perhaps indefinitely, what superficial observers regard as inevitable.

There is, however, strong evidence to indicate that what is being predicted for Czechoslovakia is actually taking place in Spain. In that country the bulwarks so long maintained against Franco and his Italo-German allies appear now to be crumbling. The rapid eastward march of the nationalists has brought them within a short distance of the sea. Unless halted, they may soon have split the republican area in two, making further resistance impossible.

The next few days will be very revealing in this connection. There is always a possibility that the eleventh-hour stand made by the government forces at Madrid may be duplicated, with French assistance this time playing the role that Russian equipment, plus the aid of the International Brigade, did then. Yet the perilous plight of the Spanish republicans is not subject to discount. However efficient the armed force they have been able to build during the 20 months of civil war, they have long suffered from a shortage of airplanes and heavy artillery. This lack may now prove fatal.

In Spain, Mussolini may have his reward for quietly accepting the German annexation of Austria. There are ample indications that since Hitler's army reorganization, and the elevation of Ribbentrop to the post of foreign minister of the Reich, Germany's once limited interest in the Spanish problem has been quickened. In all probability Franco's present smashing offensive would have been impossible without heavy reinforcements both of Italian manpower and German equipment.

So the blow to Mussolini's prestige resulting from the establishment of German garrisons on the Brenner may be assuaged by helping Italy to victory in Spain. But that would be no reason for Hitler to feel that he had not made the best of the bargain. The Fuehrer would then be assured of a Fascist Spain, hostile to France, athwart that country's southern frontier. What advantage has an immediate conquest of Czechoslovakia compared with that?

Wet Blanket On The Budget.

Many constructive features of the District appropriations bill agreed to by the conference committee are overshadowed by the unsatisfactory compromise on a local relief study. The chief purpose of this proposed inquiry is to provide information on which Congress may base a supplemental relief appropriation. But the bill now calls for a report by August 1. Congress will almost certainly have adjourned by that time, which means that no action can be taken until next winter.

That prospect would be less disturbing if the Board of Public Welfare had been granted discretion as to the expenditure of the $900,000 made available for unemployment relief. But the conference committee has forbidden it to spend more than one-twelfth of the sum per month.

In short, the committee has evaded the grave issue of relieving families said to be in desperate circumstances through the use of public funds. That is an extremely disheartening example for Congress to set before other municipal governments which are usually inclined to unload the relief problem upon Federal agencies.

No less disappointing is the reduction of the 50 new policemen allowed by the Senate to a bare 10 in the conference bill. Another blow is the elimination of the proposed Northwest public health center. It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that neither health nor law enforcement was given the consideration it demands in the conference committee.

Traffic items fared much better at the hands of the committee. The underpass to be built beneath Thomas Circle and the K street overpass should substantially relieve congestion. Replacement of the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge is an essential improvement that may well be undertaken while there is a surplus in the highway fund which cannot be used for general expenses. Instead of spending a large sum for a Massachusetts avenue bridge, allowance has been made for enlargement of the Rock Creek Parkway tunnel. That appears to be a reasonable compromise if it is technically feasible.

No budget is ever entirely satisfactory to all citizens. Perhaps on the whole the District's 1939 supply bill is as satisfactory as similar measures in previous years have been. But its inadequacy as to the three vital items—relief, health and law enforcement—tends to throw a wet blanket over the entire bill.

The TVA Investigation.

In abandoning his plan for an investigation of the TVA by the Federal Trade Commission, and introducing a resolution in favor of a special senatorial probe, Senator Norris has demonstrated the sincerity of his desire for a genuine fact-finding inquiry.

His original proposal would have been entirely unsuitable and ineffective. The FTC would have been in the embarrassing position of sitting in judgment upon another executive agency of the Government. As a result, the commission inquiry into the TVA would inevitably have been limited in scope, timorous as to conclusions, and of little or no constructive value. Moreover, Senator Norris would have been suspected of trying to hush up a very serious controversy of vital public importance.

Congress created the TVA and upon Congress devolves the responsibility for investigating the charges that have been brought against it. The duty cannot be delegated to the executive branch of Government. But since Senator Norris has at last yielded to the overwhelming pressure of such arguments it is a pity that he was not less captious in phrasing his resolution calling for a special senatorial committee of inquiry.

The Senator is open to legitimate criticism on account of the labored effort with which he seeks to enlarge the investigation to cover such unascertainable data as "the financial loss to the municipalities and farm organizations" prevented by injunction suits from purchasing electric power from TVA. It is enough to demand "a full and complete investigation of all phases of the administration" of the act, as is done in the concluding section of the resolution. Because of his selective emphasis upon the obstructionist tactics of the private utilities, Senator Norris defines himself a bad loser and encourages his adversaries to include in the resolution a long list of specific charges against the TVA management.

It is obviously important that the resolution of inquiry should be devoid of any suggestion that the issues to be examined have been prejudged. But it is even more important that the members of the committee shall be competent, informed investigators, undertaking their difficult task without partisan bias, with single-minded determination to get at the relevant facts.

Therefore, the latest move to substitute a joint Congressional investigation for the proposed senatorial inquiry is unfortunate, not because the House lacks competent men but because its membership changes rapidly, and is more amenable to political pressure. For this reason, it is far better to entrust an investigation of the TVA, which may take months to complete, to the Senate rather than to a joint committee.

Even so, the selection of the committee members raises difficult questions. Senator Norris, in a very public-spirited fashion, has stated that he would not accept an appointment to serve. Ideally he is right in thinking that his strong bias should disqualify him. Unfortunately, open-minded Senators, free from any suspicion of prejudice for or against the controlling management in the Tennessee Valley, are scarce. And the chances are that the really neutral observers are for that reason without the specialized knowledge essential to the conduct of an effective inquiry.

It is frequently the men with strong convictions who are best equipped to ask searching questions, to appraise the significance of testimony, and to co-ordinate the confusing detail of a major legislative inquiry. Senator Norris, in spite of his admitted bias, could render invaluable service to a TVA investigating committee because of his knowledge and experience. It would be a pity to dispense with his expert aid. Perhaps it would not be necessary to do so, if his presence on the proposed committee were offset by the addition of a critic like Senator Bridges, ready and eager to emphasize the other side of the case.

Second Thought At Manila.

For some time it has been evident that the approach to independence has been a sobering experience for the Filipino people. During those years when the goal was merely a patriotic anticipation, the campaign to attain it became a national passion. Now that independence is an actual problem to be grappled with, a far more realistic attitude has developed.

Aggressive conquests in both Europe and Asia during the last few years have also encouraged modification of the Filipinos' ambitions. So it is not surprising to those who have followed the trend of events at Manila to find President Quezon indorsing High Commissioner McNutt's plea for a realistic re-examination of the entire issue. Nor will it be surprising if a Filipino delegation is in Washington within a few months asking Congress to amend the Tydings-McDuffie act so as to grant the islands something less than a complete separation from the United States.

President Quezon was never enthusiastic over the independence act. He thought its economic provisions were too severe. There are some indications, too, that he would have preferred to keep the protecting arm of the United States about the Philippines, while granting the islands full local autonomy. But having made an issue of independence as the political leader of the islands, he was in no position to reject the offer which was made. After failing to secure revision of the act, there was no alternative to accepting it.

Mr. McNutt probably voices the majority sentiment in the islands when he pleads for reconsideration of the whole situation. As he points out, the United States has prepared the Filipinos for political independence, but left them economically very dependent upon this country. Every day which carries the Philippines closer to the year of separation—1946—sharpens appreciation of this fact. Add to this the grave uncertainty as to how long the islands could maintain their independence without the aid of the United States and the case for a final dissolution of the tie with this country becomes progressively weaker.

If the Filipinos conclude that their future can be best safeguarded by some limited form of self-government, their petition will command thoughtful consideration in Washington. Aside from this country's special interests in the Philippines, we have moral obligations there that could not be discharged by stubbornly clinging to the present law in the face of greatly changed conditions.

Chamberlain's House Of Cards.

Both in tone and temper Premier Chamberlain's current speech to Parliament on the Austrian situation is in glaring contrast with the speech he made on February 21, on the occasion of Anthony Eden's resignation.

Gone, this time, is the pumped-up optimism of the earlier pronouncement, the fervent hope that by "frank discussion" with the Fascist powers it would be possible to bring about a regime of "general appeasement" which would save "the peace of Europe for a generation." Gone, too, is the belief that all that was necessary for Great Britain to do was to approach Hitler and Mussolini "in a spirit of mutual confidence."

Mr. Chamberlain knows better now. The Austrian developments have been for him and his cabinet a most disillusioning experience. Their house of cards has fallen. As Chamberlain points out:

> It seems to us that the methods adopted throughout these events call for the severest condemnation and have administered a profound shock to all those who are interested in the preservation of European peace. It follows that what has passed cannot fail to prejudice the hope of His Majesty's government of removing the misunderstandings between nations and promoting international co-operation.

But now, as heretofore, Chamberlain sidesteps the logic of the situation created by Germany's forcible absorption of Austria and the very real possibility that this will not be the last blow dealt by Hitler at the status quo. On the question of Czechoslovakia, now catapulted into the very center of the European stage, the British prime minister was noncommittal.

It would be wrong, however, to conclude from this that in the future Great Britain will continue to pursue a policy of relative quiescence regarding developments on the continent of Europe. By slow and even imperceptible stages the British are finding themselves drawn in. What is today the sentiment of an increasing element in the House of Commons, Conservative as well as Liberal and Laborite, that Great Britain join forces with France in guaranteeing the continued independence of Czechoslovakia may, however reluctantly, be the policy of the government tomorrow.

In the meantime Chamberlain has learned one thing to his sorrow. He has learned that in dealing with the dictators moral pressure is utterly inadequate when not backed by a readiness to take necessary action. No wonder, then, that the moral which he draws from the Austrian incident is Britain's need of more intensive and extensive rearmament than ever before.

Daffydowndillies.

It is appropriate for a man to do his daily stint with a cheerful and contented spirit, but there are times when the staidest and most methodical will grow restless. Take the editorial writer. He is a solemn bird and his mind is supposed to churn out bright ideas. But getting under way he sees a couple of pictures in his favorite newspaper proving that it is daffodil blossom time in the counties of Tidewater Virginia. Sowhatthehellbill. Let the other guys do the serious thinking. His typewriter begins to sing:

Lift up, my heart, and pound the keys, and sing of sunny Southern leas, where,
peddling kisses, bread and cheese, sweet
Spring is playing coster! Forgetting chills and minor ills one's soul with glowing rapture fills at thoughts of blooming daffodils in Mathews and in Gloucester!

We've simply got to shout the news! How can a poet e'er refuse to supplement the dainty mews the pussywillows foster? The Spring upon a cold world spills her load of sweets and fancy frills including blooming daffodils in Mathews and in Gloucester.

Why should a doubting world repine? We prayed for spring and here's a sign: A fisherman pays out his line, a helpful paternoster. The birds tweet titillating trills; there's life in brooks and rippling rills; and there are blooming daffodils in Mathews and in Gloucester!

An American Party.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A Virginia Democrat who is also an "American first," I wish to indorse most emphatically the sentiments expressed in the letter of the South Carolina Democrat in your issue of March 8.

Fooled at first by the claims that the radical acts of the New Deal were emergency measures we have witnessed so many attacks on our American form of government that we can no longer doubt that its complete overthrow is planned by this Administration. Encroachment on the civil service by the spoils system; determined attacks on the Constitution and the Supreme Court; the substitution of rule by men for rule by law; the centralizing of more and more power in the Federal Government and the log-rolling method of passing a vital measure like the vicious farm act must convince the most skeptical that the President's program of a "planned economy" contemplates the ordering of every one's actions by bureaus in Washington, which bureaus in turn will take their orders from the Chief Executive.

The farmers have tamely surrendered; industry is next on the docket and then distribution until finally we will all have to write to Washington to find out what we may and may not do.

By all means let us have an "American party" and get it into action while we still have some liberty of action.

Hot Words Over TVA.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The necessity faced by dictatorial governments of forcing their private sets of principles down the throats of the erring who differ is frankly conceded. But the Lilienthal threat to buy competing Southeast utilities still causes those not saturated with New Deal fervor to rise and demand: With What? Are there no unsafe limits of governmental deficit?

But in the name of control lust and possibly humanitarianism the whole country is to have this added burden saddled on. Before this became a Government of superior minds and infallible judgments, embattled against greed, liberty leagues, slimy monopolies and other sinister boogies chiefly products of its disordered imagination, this was—a fact now hard to credit—an orderly and representative Government.

Lopping off the largest utility charge, taxes, undoubtedly would lower the already reasonable rates to the favored regions, difference to be borne out of the public trough. The real economy would result from dismissal of the large staffs required to file the thousands of returns demanded by bureaucracy. But if failure of tax revenues endangered pet New Deal objectives, would rates be safe from stiff hikes to salvage such projects?

The mere thought of further extension of public activity under Government—especially the incumbent outfit with its five-year record of squandering, fake salvation, bungling and present demonstration of obstructed recovery—becomes faintly nauseating.

Picketing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A picket supported by union dues carries a sign which reads: "Unfair to organized labor. A sign in the window reads: "The employes of this establishment are 100 per cent American and are satisfied with their jobs and wages."

The owners of such places should hire a rival picket with sign reading: "Read the Unfair to Labor Claim—Read Our Employes' Statement—Then Follow Your Own Judgment."

When pickets stampede the front of a place in a pure spirit of 6-year-old harassment, the whole idea becomes nonsense and defeats the object sought. The writer is a former member of several trade-unions. If forced higher wages compel a place to close, due to depression conditions, who is organized labor being fair to? MAN-IN-STREET.

Purge In November.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago, in an editorial, you meant to poke a little fun, I suppose, at the President for his analogy of the present mode of sailing the good old boat. I am a little surprised that you would regard what he said as illustrating a policy of drifting aimlessly about, getting nowhere.

To my mind, his metaphor was a fine one and a perfectly truthful picture of his mastery at the helm. For some time he has been faced by head winds of deliberate misrepresentation, clever but treacherous. Master sailor that our skipper is, he employs the fine art of tacking, not joy sailing or running with the wind, like we did in 1928 and 1932, and in the end, by port and starboard tacks, he will come to the goal, as our ancestors did when sailing for the new America. It is an ill wind that blows no one good, but be it ever so perverse, a fine sailor as is the President will land us safely in the port of social security.

To get the vast number of admirers of the President to believe that his administration is a hodgepodge of political blunders is silly. We, the majority, are disgusted with his critics, not him. Why are his critics so afraid of him if he is so wrong? The intelligent electorate will doubtless give him a more loyal crew at the coming Congressional purge this November. Watch for the scramble for life-preservers when the captain yells, "All hands on deck!" A READER.

More On Cheops.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From a most interesting article by the Associated Press from Cairo, Egypt, under date of March 10, appearing on the front page of your issue of March 11, I observe that the researches to which I called attention in a letter which you published on July 17 last, under the caption, "The Cheops Complex," have now been carried forward by other explorers who have apparently just reported most important supplemental discoveries concerning the early Egyptian king who built the great pyramid, and one of his daughters, who likewise became a pyramid builder.

It will be recalled that Ludwig (before displaying the subject for one of more recently published biographies) wrote of the Nile, and in that work said of Cheops that he objected to any controls, or reports of his spending, and that under him, in a land which in earlier times had been the bravest in the seat of power, "the very soil became the property of a god beyond control, and this determined the whole structure of society, even into the kingdom of the dead."

Obviously the virtue of this example has not been wholly wasted, as a measure recently submitted for the "reorganization" of a certain other government makes clear. Nor indeed does it seem that the basic principle of Cheops in requiring the people of his country to labor in relays for the monument upon which he had set his heart, but which to them was but an incubus and absorber of their liberty and the fruits of their labor, is being wholly disregarded.

To him the completion of this evidence of his glory was so important that, according to your Cairo dispatch, he even "sacrificed the honor of his daughter to obtain the money to complete the pyramid, and the princess built herself a small pyramid of the stones given to her by her lovers." Such is the power of example and the value sometimes placed upon worthless stones!

Until the cartouche of the princess is fully deciphered it is not possible to submit her name more than tentatively. From the advices so far received it is indicated that her name is revealing itself as the Egyptian equivalent of Miss Democracy. If this is finally verified, the list of lovers to whom her honor was sacrificed by her father, while of considerable length, will become at once apparent, even though that will not settle the point of why she should trade her virtue for a mausoleum.

The Other Side.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just seen your cartoon of Hitler's Nazification of Austria and read your editorial "Hitler's Triumph" and Barnet Nover's denunciation of Hitler's most recent move. I disagree rather fundamentally with the opinions expressed and think it is high time the other side was heard from.

Just consider the Austrian situation immediately before the invasion of the German army. Hitler's attempts to Nazify Austria by diplomatic pressure were blocked by the impending plebiscite. Nazis and the proponents of an independent Austria were rapidly gathering forces. Friction was increasing. The day before Hitler's move the first blood was shed in street fighting. If Hitler had not intervened civil war would probably have resulted. Since Hitler's coup no blood has been shed.

Then the plebiscite would hardly have been fair. The phrasing of the question was designed to hurt the Nazi cause. The age limit of 24 excluded many young Nazis. Since the Nazi movement in Austria was still on the upgrade, the result of a plebiscite now would not be the same as the result of one six months from now. The difference would be in Hitler's favor.

Thus Hitler had the choice of going down in ignominious failure or taking decisive action. He knew he had the power so he went ahead. I cannot see how any other result of the situation could have come about.

Then why shouldn't Austria be better off under Hitler than independent? I fail to see the advantage of independence of small groups. After the World War central Europe was divided up on the basis of racial groups. A noble-sounding idea, but—suppose Russia had continued the war against the central powers. Would we now have an independent Poland, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia? I don't doubt that Latvia values its independence, and if Russia challenged it the world would gasp in pious horror. The only reason Latvia was created was to keep Russia away from the sea. And Ireland has always continued to be a part of the British empire.

The German people are, in the opinion of every person I have met who has visited Germany, happy and prosperous. Germany, under Hitler, has gained power, prestige and commercial wealth much more quickly than under the post-war republic. If a free election were held in Germany I would give odds of 100 to 1 that Hitler would receive a much larger majority than Roosevelt did in this country. The same will soon be true of Austria.

Of course, such a radical change of government will cause sorrow to many sincere Austrian patriots and the Austrian Jews, but the sorrow will not be as great as that which would be caused by civil war.

Hitler has often been denounced for his propaganda. A cartoon representing the Nazis grasping in a beast-like hand the key to something certainly not favorable to the peace of the world; an editorial, respecting Hitler's power, but at least hinting at nefarious methods and diabolical intentions. An independent article denouncing Hitler morally in a very one-sided manner. I, personally, have never seen a single pro-Hitler editorial. We have no propaganda!

Cafeteria Hostess

A HOSTESS' job in a cafeteria might well be compared to that of the "trouble shooter" in a telephone office.

A searching look about the dining room to make certain it is in readiness, a last look at the steam table, and she is ready to open the doors. One of the first in line is the little gray man who will get all his dinner except the dessert. Retiring to a corner, he will eat his dinner and read the morning paper until almost closing time, coming back then for his second cup of coffee and a piece of chocolate cake.

Crash! Bang! Someone has fallen on that top step again. Most people coming upstairs with a loaded tray watch it carefully until they get to the last step, then a darting look around to locate a table, and they forget that remaining step. A gentleman was assisting a lady to arise when the hostess gets there and she leads her to an inconspicuous corner. The mopping-up squad of bus boys arrives and cleans up the debris. After making certain the guest has had nothing worse than her feelings hurt, the hostess brings her a duplicate tray of food.

Informed by a bus boy that a guest wishes to see her, she goes to the table. It is the man who always carefully selects his steak, eats half of it and then complains. The guest is always right; so another steak is the order of the evening.

The owner has arrived and detected an odor of food and humanity to which the hostess has gradually become accustomed and thus failed to notice. She saunters casually over to a window and surreptitiously shoves it up for a few inches. Sneaking off into a corner, she watches for the inevitable to happen. Wham! That was the window. Mr. John Q. Public does not relish eating his dinner on a winter's night with a cold breeze circling his neck.

The lady who doesn't eat a combination of starches and proteins has asked for help and the hostess has to assist in her selection of foods.

A guest wants a dinner packed to take out—how the hostess loves that! Another beseeches a couple of soft-boiled eggs on toast. A despairing glance at the long line of waiting people and she is about to refuse. A second look at the pale face of the guest and she tells her to go sit down—if she will wait a bit, the eggs and toast will be forthcoming.

Almost everyone in line is waiting for a chicken pie and she can't get them to move along without their pie. Hastening to the kitchen, she implores the chef to hurry them up.

"I'm baking them as fast as I can," he protests. 'Can I help it if everyone here tonight wants chicken pie?"

A guest in the dining room beckons to her. She has tickets to a lecture or the theater that she can't use. The hostess accepts them appreciatively—if she can't use them, she knows others who can.

An SOS arrives from the dietitian at the desk in the kitchen. The old man who sells flowers out front wants to see the owner and won't tell her why. The hostess talks to the wan old fellow and learns that he has just been released from the hospital and wants to borrow $2 from the owner to start up his business again. She tries to persuade him to come in and have something to eat, but he refuses. She then consults with the owner, who is having her own dinner. That lady requests her to get $2 from the office and join her in the kitchen, where she will talk to the old man. He is already at dinner when the hostess arrives with the money, which the owner gives to him, leaving instructions for sandwiches to be made up for him to take out.

It is time to close and the doors are hooked. The inevitable late guests arrive a few minutes afterward and implore her to get them something, "just anything," from the kitchen. They little realize the action that galvanizes the entire force of a cafeteria when the doors close. Everything is immediately put in containers and refrigerators, everyone combining in getting away to take up their private lives as quickly as possible. But the hostess' job is not finished until the last guest leaves the dining room and the whole place is in order, ready for the next meal.

All jobs dealing with the public are rich in human experiences, and that of the cafeteria hostess is not the least of these.

ALICE M. MILLER.

The Hammock.

As lengthening days and a mounting mercury hint at winter's waning and bespeak a prospect of pleasanter periods to follow, thought turns to that boon companion of relaxing hours, that well-nigh vanished a bit of "Gay Nineties" Americana, the hammock. Rivaling the condor in ability to remain suspended indefinitely in midair, it possessed other bird-like attributes, notably that of migration, disappearing with the swallows at the first frost to show up again at straw-hat time.

The hammock had a strong amnity for trees, being found under them in considerable number, if, indeed, it was not making itself at home, sparrow-like, on the veranda. Usually of gay plumage, it occasionally appeared in more subdued tones, its dove-white canvass, on loosely woven netting hinting at its maritime ancestry.

Fair Enough

What The Law Can't Cover.

Los Angeles.

Catherine Waugh McCulloch, of Chicago, belatedly sends your correspondent a Christmas card which is a reprint of the probity law of Guatemala. The law provides that the President of the republic and other officials of all classes, with a few exceptions in the petty grades, on accepting office must deposit with the director of accounts a statement of all their properties and debts. This statement must include also the property and debts of the wife and children, who may be under dominion of the father, and other properties which the official may have under his administration.

PEGLER.

All such officials, their relatives within the fourth degree of consanguinity or the second degree of affinity and their intimate friends are prohibited from becoming contractors or providers of state supplies in dealings with the departments in which the functionaries render service.

* * * *

THERE MAY have been a time when such a law would have been approved by public opinion in the United States. Nepotism and hidden interests long were a scandal in local and State government and in the lower orders of the Federal service, and there was much resentment from time to time until recently. A few years ago a large number of Congressmen were defeated for re-election through the political exploitations in their home districts of their Washington office pay rolls.

Far from pursuing this line, however, public opinion here has become much more tolerant and now regards public office, even of the highest, as a legitimate field of commercial profit not only by the relatives and in-laws of the incumbents but by the officials themselves. The Presidency itself is recognized as a jack-pot for the occupant and the members of the family, and no higher grade in conduct is required of them in this respect than is required of a mayor, councilman or commissioner of streets and sewers in a rough-and-tumble municipality.

Like the heavyweight championship of the world, the Presidency offers plenty of pickings. No heavyweight champion confines his earnings to purses won in the ring. He goes in also for radio, journalism and the sale of indorsements among other sidelines. These are accepted legitimate practices, and it is a pleasant sign when high officers avoid snobbery in a great democracy.

* * * *

BUT EVEN the Guatemalan law would not cover everything, and the exploitation of an office which sometimes has been described as the highest in the world is governed finally by the ethics of the man who occupies it. It is one thing to lecture a nation on the ethics of citizenship in a message to Congress, but a man's own ethics as shown by his own conduct and that of persons whose conduct is subject to his personal authority.

The Guatemalan law is not clever enough to forbid the son of a President to sell insurance to any bank handling government deposits, to liquor companies beholden to the government for permits and other facilities or to anyone interested in a radio company existing by the pleasure of a political commission of the government. It did not have the foresight to forbid a son of a President to take employment at a high rate of pay to represent a company before a political bureau having arbitrary powers to grant or withhold favors of great value. It says nothing about lobbying by members of the Presidential family or the appointment of relatives to well-paid offices in the government.

Apparently, even in Guatemala much is left to the ethics of those concerned, and from the point where the law leaves off it is a question of their civic morality, just as income tax cases often rest upon questions of civic morality.

The hat-snatch racketeers of the night clubs seem to have hit on the only sure preventive. They pay their employes a straight salary just as we pay our Presidents, but they make them wear uniforms without any pocket.

Hitler's Vienna Talk

Fuehrer Calls Austro-German Union His Greatest Achievement, Of Which None Can "Swindle" Him Or The Reich.

Vienna, March 15.—The text of Fuehrer Hitler's address in Heroes' Square today:

German men and women, within a period of a few days a revolutionary transformation has taken place within the German racial community, a transformation which we no duobt see today in all its magnitude, the significance of which, however, only later generations will be able to measure.

A lot has been said in the last few years by executive authorities of a now abolished regime about a special mission which in their opinion the country must fulfill.

The leader of the Monarchists accurately described this view. According to him, it was the function of this so-called independence of the Austrian country—an independence forced upon it by peace treaty and dependent upon the favor of foreign powers—to prevent formation of a great German Reich and thus barricade the path of the German people into the future.

I proclaim herewith for this land its new mission—a strict command for all Germans: The most thoroughly German outpost of the German people shall from henceforth be the newest bulwark of the German nation and therefore of the German Reich.

Holds Austria Outpost To Guarantee Reich.

Through centuries in troubled times of the past, storms of the east have broken on the border of the old eastern outpost (Ostmark).

In centuries to come, for all time, there shall be an iron guarantee for the security and freedom of the German Reich, and therewith a guarantee for the happiness and peace of our great people.

And I know the old eastern outpost of the German Reich will fulfill this new mission with the same certainty as it carried out and mastered the old.

I speak in the name of millions of inhabitants of this wonderful German land, in the name of the Styrians, of the Viennese, of the upper Austrians, of the Carinthians, of the Tyrolians—above all, however, in the name of the city of Vienna.

I proclaim to the other 68,000,000 German compatriots who are listening now: This land is German. It has fulfilled its mission. No one will be permitted to swindle it. Our task, however, will be through work and industry and firm co-operation to solve the great social, cultural and economic problems, above all, however, to build up this land into a mighty fortress of nationalist conviction.

But I cannot conclude this appeal to you without remembering those men who in such difficult and stormy days assisted us, with God's help, to achieve victory.

Hitler Terms Union His Greatest Work.

First and foremost I thank the new Reich governor, Seyss-Inquart. I thank countless party members and innumerable and nameless idealists who in the bitter struggle lasting years worked to accomplish reunification of the German people.

Years of suffering have strengthened me in my conviction of the worth of the German-Austrian people within our great racial community.

The wonderful manner and discipline wherewith this tremendous event was accomplished is also evidence of the spiritual power of this people.

In this hour I report to the German people the greatest achievement of my life. As leader and chancellor of the great German nation and of the Reich I declare to history the entrance of my native land into the German Reich.

To Germany and its newest national unit, to the National Socialist Party, to the armed forces, hail victory!

Seyss-Inquart Calls Hitler 'Achiever.'

Vienna, March 15 (AP).—The text of Austrian Gov. Arthur Seyss-Inquart's greeting to Fuehrer Hitler today:

My Fuehrer!

As the last chief organ of the federal state of Austria I report to the Fuehrer and Reichs-chancellor the completion of the legal decision which is in accordance with the will of the German people and its Fuehrer.

To the German people and to the whole world, I announce Adolf Hitler has arrived as Fuehrer and Reichs-chancellor at this hour in the hufberg of the old Reich capital, protector of the crown of the kingdom about which centuries of German history have revolved, and for which uncounted millions of the best Germans have bled and died.

What was the ultimate consolation in heated struggles of recent years and in the bitterest hours has been completed today. Ostmark (old German name for Austria) has returned to the homeland.

The Reich is again resurrected. The right of the German people is created. My Fuehrer, the strength of all generations of the German people is concentrated now under your will and you, my Fuehrer, created this work for all generations of the German future.

Today all Germans salute the Fuehrer as achiever. Today the Fuehrer salutes a new eternal Germany.

My Fuehrer, we give only one kind of thanks—the thanks of complete love, unconditional faithfulness. Wherever the way way leads we follow. Heil! My Fuehrer!

Goering May Inherit.

Berlin, March 15 (U.P.).—Adolf Hitler, who will be received in Berlin tomorrow like a conquering Caesar back from the wars, may turn over his title of German chancellor to Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering and become "Fuehrer of the Great Germany," according to widespread reports here tonight.

Hitler arrived in Munich by airplane this evening from Vienna after proclaiming Austria as a state of the Third Reich.

Berlin officials announced that Hitler would be greeted here in "a reception unprecedented in the history of Berlin."

The government's D. N. B. agency announced that Der Fuehrer would return to his newly-won state soon and address several meetings in preparation for the plebiscite to be held April 10 on the question of the incorporation of Austria into the German Reich.

'World Press' Kept From Hitler Talk By Nazi Trooper

Vienna, March 15 (AP).—About 35 members of the foreign newspaper corps almost missed Chancellor Hitler's speech in Heroes' Square today when they unexpectedly found themselves "prisoners" in the chancellery.

They went to the press section of the foreign office to obtain permits to witness the demonstration. When they attempted to leave they found the way blocked by a black uniformed SS trooper, who shouted.

"Get back! I have orders to shoot if the stairs are not cleared!"

Although the "world press," which Hitler often has attacked, enlisted the aid of the press section and even made representations to the American Legation, it was many minutes, and Hitler's address was well under way, before they obtained their release.

Nazi Paraders Routed In Belgian Celebration

Eupen, Belgium, March 15 (AP).—Police today broke up a parade of singing Nazis in this former German town celebrating Adolf Hitler's absorption of Austria. Four demonstrators were arrested.

The parade was conducted by pro-German youths, garbed in gray jackets and boots, under the guise of a glider club. The territory of Eupen and Malmedy was ceded to Belgium by Germany under the Treaty of Versailles.

Austrian Jews Forced To Clean Ghetto Streets

Vienna, March 15 (AP).—While hundreds of thousands of Viennese watched united Austrian and German armed forces on parade today, several dozen Jews, men and women, scrubbed sidewalks in the ghetto under storm troopers' orders.

The troopers ordered them to scour off "Heil Austria!" and other slogans which had been painted in red during the final days of the Schuschnigg regime. Other Jews were compelled to clean Schuschnigg posters from lamp posts.

A Biography Of George Clinton.

GEORGE CLINTON, Revolutionary soldier, seven times Governor of New York and twice Vice President of the United States, was not an exciting person—at least in comparison with his more brilliant contemporaries. He lacked the constructive genius of Hamilton, the restless and unscrupulous ambition of Burr, the tremendous vigor of his nephew, DeWitt Clinton. But he possessed a stability and scrupulousness which these younger men did not share.

One feels, in reading Mr. Spaulding's excellent biography, that Clinton lingered far too long on the public stage. His best work was accomplished as Governor of New York during the Revolution and throughout the "critical period." The ablest of the war governors, he gave Washington prompt and ready co-operation. In the post-war years, he administered State affairs efficiently, honestly, and in a spirit of admirable nonpartisanship. As leader and spokesman of the small-farmer class in the State, in opposition to the great landlords and merchant capitalists, he was satisfied with the working of the Articles of Confederation—in peacetime at any rate—and opposed ratification of the Constitution of 1787.

* * * *

IT IS EVIDENT from Mr. Spaulding's subtitle that he regards this stand of Clinton's as negative and unsuccessful, though it was as highly significant in appraising the man. He who fights for a lost cause does not, as a rule, fare well at the hands of historians, and so it has been with Clinton and other so-called Antifederalists of 1787-88. Mr. Spaulding does not suggest that they were right, but he does make their position understandable.

To George Clinton and his Antifederalist friends (writes Mr. Spaulding) a strong centralized Government represented the direct antithesis of all that they had fought for in the Revolution. They did not wish to be governed from a far-away capital, taxed by the representatives of other States, and disciplined by standing armies over which they had little or no control. These were just the things that they had objected to under British rule and they wanted no more of them. Wars might have to be fought by Federal armies, and treaties negotiated by the agents of a distant Congress; but most of the functions of Government could be far better and more safely conducted by their own representatives in the city council or State Legislature.

They wished to be ruled by their own neighbors in their own State, not by the representatives of a dozen other States gathered at a distant capital. Why was it necessary to create a super-State? After all, the federation had succeeded in winning a major war. These arguments were so convincing to thousands of Americans that had it not been for the great depression of the so-called critical period, the Federal Constitution would never have been ratified by the States."

* * * *

CLINTON'S STRONG STAND against the Constitution made him the logical leader of the Antifederalists, but in the new Republican Party, which arose to combat centralization and the financial measures of Alexander Hamilton, Clinton was eclipsed by the younger, more versatile and brilliant Jefferson. There was little left for him to accomplish after the Constitution was ratified. This he apparently realized when he voluntarily retired from the governorship in 1795. Only the exigencies of State politics—and a pathetic and hopeless Presidential ambition—persuaded him to stand for a seventh term in 1801. Success here led to the Vice Presidential nomination and election in 1804. Despite plain manifestations of senility in the Vice President's chair, Clinton aspired to be Jefferson's successor in 1808, and hardly forgave the politicians who again shunted him into the Vice Presidential office, with Madison as his chief. From this time until his death in April, 1812, he was a center of opposition to the Madison Administration.

One would prefer to forget these later years and to remember Clinton as the youthful Whig, the loyal and energetic war Governor, and the champion of New York's small farmers against concentrated economic and political power.

Mr. Spaulding has neglected no side of Clinton's character or public career. We see here his hard business sense, his share in the land speculations of the period, his devoted interest in his children and grandchildren, his Francophile sympathies—his daughter, Cornelia, married the former French envoy, "Citizen" Genet—his democratic preference for simple and economical living. Mr. Spaulding also presents a clear picture of the complicated politics of New York in the years from 1789 to 1812, the shifts and maneuvers of Burr and Hamilton and of the great families—the Livingstons and Schuylers as well as the upstart Clintons. The biography is an important addition to American political history.

Love. Vs. "Ideology"

By Joseph F. Thorning

USUALLY, THE CAREER of a dancer is colorful enough. When that dancer happens to be the daughter of a musical director and a girl endowed with more than her share of a taste for romantic adventure she supplies the electric spark that ignites men and events.

Janet Riesenfeld is the girl; Jaime, an aristocratic Spaniard, is the boy, while the locale shifts with bewildering swiftness from Hollywood to Mexico City and then even more suddenly to the Franco-Spanish frontier on the very day, July 18, 1936, when the civil war broke out at scattered points in the peninsula.

The blocked frontier proved no barrier to the author. Enlisting the aid of a newspaperman, for whom she acted as interpreter, Miss Riesenfeld entered the Fourth Estate herself and after a roundabout tour via Cerbere, Portbou and Barcelona, she managed to arrive, breathless and penniless, in the heart of war-torn Madrid.

Her pictures of the initial panic of the populace, the day-by-day encounters with shrapnel, hunger and volunteer police squads are no less vivid than the pen-and-ink drawings of Lyle Justis. Even more sympathetically does the dancer-journalist convey to her readers the patient good-humor of the average Madrileno. The literary vignettes created by Janet Riesenfeld indicate how readily men, women and children adjust themselves to conditions of siege, privation and terrifying espionage, provided they are given a cause in which they sincerely believe. "Love itself," it is suggested, "is dominated by devotion to a social belief."

* * * *

THIS IS THE CLEW to the disastrous outcome of the author's romance with Jaime. The latter, ostensibly directing a tourist agency, was evidently engaged in some mysterious communication with the Nationalists outside the walls. He viewed with increasing misgivings Janet's familiarity with thoroughgoing revolutionaries like Villatora and Jose Maria. Lovers' quarrels grew in number and violence. It was Janet who yielded, begging forgiveness and promising to avoid the radical agitators. In the end, Jaime was "involved" in a scheme to arm subversive elements within Madrid and Janet with Jose Maria finds her lover stretched out side by side with many others in the morgue. The raison d'etre for a transatlantic voyage and dangerous living in the midst of war had perished for principles directly opposed to the ideal which the girl who loved a la folie had come to accept. In this way the serpent of "ideological differences" crept into a youthful Garden of Paradise.

Although "Dancer in Madrid" embodies a fascinating human-interest narrative with a minimum of political interpretation, it picks up, refurbishes and retells an oft-demolished version of the mythical "massacre" of Badajos.

The fact is that the "slaughter" of Badajos was announced in the French press of the Left in Paris two days before Badajos fell. The report of Franco's cruelty covered the natural grief which the Republicans felt upon the loss of this crucial, hard-fought battle.

Austria

over the city as the procession marched past the reviewing stand.

Der Fuehrer opened his address with the greeting: "German men and women, within a period of a few days a revolutionary transformation has taken place within the German racial community . . ."

He appealed to the 7,000,000 new subjects of Germany to meet their responsibilities as "the most thoroughly German outpost" and "the newest bulwark of the German nation."

He declared that through centuries past, storms of the east have "broken on the order" of Austria, and said that in centuries to come "there shall be an iron guarantee for the security and freedom of the German Reich."

"Drang Noch Osten."

Many observers saw in his statement a revival of the prewar German "Drang Noch Osten," or march to the East.

Seyss-Inquart introduced his leader to the excited crowd by formally reporting "the legal completion of the Austrian-German anschluss (union)," and declaring "we greet the leader of a new, eternal Germany."

Among Jews, particularly the 290,000 who live in Vienna, there was well-grounded fear as Nazi enthusiasts started to "discipline" Jewish districts.

Police "Purge" Slated.

Austria is to be divided into three great Nazi party districts: Vienna, the Danube district including lower Austria and Burgenland, and a third to take in the other six Austrian provinces.

Heinrich Himmler, German police head, announced a purge of the Austrian police would be undertaken immediately, "after the pattern" previously followed in Germany.

All "politically irresponsible" elements are to be removed. Two distinct branches are to be instituted—officers to keep order and security—police, including the Gestapo and criminal police, and administrative officers.

Crime Wave Admitted.

Efforts are to be directed toward building a "police force of responsible National Socialist elements closely bound to the people and completely at the Fuehrer's service."

Austria, or what was Austria, awaited the return of hundreds if not thousands of fugitives who went to Germany in recent years. They will be allowed to come back if they have a means of livelihood here.

A wave of lawlessness in Vienna was admitted in an announcement that "irresponsible elements are taking advantage of this time to seize the property of others." Nazi S. A. troops were ordered to "take the sharpest action against the practice."

Goering Due in Linz.

Baldur von Schirach, Hitler youth leader, named youth leaders for all Austrian provinces. He announced that a motor caravan was on its way from Berlin with Hitler youth uniforms, 10,000 insignia and 60 drums and trumpets for new Austrian members.

Because of Hitler's gratitude to Linz, a hotbed of Nazi agitation in the weeks before his coup, the city will get a new bridge over the Danube and be designated as the middle point of expanded Germany's tourist traffic.

It was announced that Field Marshal Goering soon would visit Linz and that the city's Franz Josef Platz would be renamed Adolf Hitler Plaza.

Throughout Austria, squares hitherto called Franz Josef Platz or Engelbert Dollfuss Platz were being renamed for Hitler.

The nazification drive included final dissolution of all organizations of the Fatherland Front, hitherto the only legal political party.

Vienna schools planned to reopen Thursday.

Cardinal Sees Hitler.

Theodore Cardinal Innitzer was reported reliably to have visited Hitler at the Hotel Imperial and to have voiced the desire of Austrian Catholics to co-operate toward building a greater Germany.

(On February 26, before the German coup, Cardinal Innitzer counseled Catholics to pray "for the peace and freedom of our Austrian fatherland.

(In a pastoral letter he quoted Chancellor Schuschnigg, fallen champion of Austria's independence, who had expressed faith "in the Lord God who will not abandon our country.")

The Nazis' net tightened around Wilhelm Miklas, Austria's former president. His home was encircled by Blackshirt Stormtroopers, who replaced an ordinary police guard.

Arrests Increasing.

A reliable Nazi source affirmed Schuschnigg still was in Vienna under heavy guard and that the list of prominent Austrians under arrest was increasing. Rumors also increased of the number of Austrians who have been killed, have committed suicide or have fled. Nearly 1,000 persons sought visas at the Polish legation within 48 hours and other legations also were swamped with applications.

The Northwest Railroad Station, no longer used for train traffic, was converted into a concentration camp.

Von Ribbentrop returned to Berlin and Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, came here.

Americans Poised to Flee.

Paris, March 15 (AP).—Americans and other foreigners in France nervously kept informed of Europe's rapidly changing situation tonight—many considering returning home unless it clears up quickly.

French official circles viewed developments as the most dangerous since the World War.

Austrian Coup Quickens Flow Of European Gold to America

N. Y. Bankers Arrange $2,255,000 Shipment From London as Prices There Drop Well Below $35, U. S. Pegged Price.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 15—The flight of European capital to the United States, precipitated by the Nazi coup in Austria, enabled New York bankers to arrange today for a shipment of $2,255,000 of gold from London to New York.

It was the first important engagement of yellow metal for import here from Europe since the gold tide turned last autumn and the U. S. Treasury modified its gold sterilization policy.

A possibility it might signal a new transatlantic gold rush into U. S. Treasury storage valuts was seen in exchange circles. Under the recent change in the sterilization policy, the Treasury will permit imports and newly-mined domestic gold up to $400,000,000 annually to go into the credit structure and expand banking reserves instead of being locked up in the "inactive" fund.

In banking quarters, another big gold import movement was expected to exert mild pressure for expansion of bank credit since surplus bank reserves have been mounting.

The engagement announced late in the day by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was made possible by a further fall in the British pound against the dollar and in the London open market price for gold to a point where bankers could profit on the shipment.

Until the march of German troops into Austria last week startled Europe and touched off a scramble to take capital out of smaller European countries, foreign funds had been flowing out of New York, exchange men said, to London, Holland and Switzerland.

It was suggested the reversal in the metal tide probably had been much larger than the engagement indicated for the dollar stabilization fund usually is a substantial buyer and seller of gold before transactions become visible in the ordinary course of movements. The stabilization's funds holdings are not reported.

Until last week, London market buyers were bidding well above the United States buying price of $35 an ounce for metal offered there. The break in the price dropped the quotation to around $34.77 an ounce today, making it profitable to ship after allowance for shipping charges, insurance and other costs.

Paris Prepares For the Worst On 2 Borders

Blum with the general staff and Paul-Boncour.

The French officials viewed anxiously the presence of thousands of fresh Italian and German troops in insurgent Spain and the tramp of field-gray Nazi sentries along the Czech frontier.

Foreign office officials expressed belief the Spanish government may be forced soon to ask foreign mediation for an armistice because of the difficult situation of the government army, in full retreat before Gen. Franco's drive to the sea.

Persistent reports that the Spanish government was seeking an armistice found no confirmation even in insurgent sources. They were denied by the Spanish embassy.

Secret service reports of a new influx of Italian troops into insurgent Spain prompted the general staff to consider reinforcement of French defenses on the Spanish frontier.

Officials said the government viewed the number of German and Italian troops in insurgent territory as surpassing the needs of the insurgent army.

Ready to Honor Pact.

Evidence of the official attitude was seen in the following statement issued through routine channels:

"Freedom of communications between France and North Africa constitutes one of the essential factors for French mobilization. The French government is thinking seriously of taking precautions which the evolution of the Spanish situation dictates for the protection of vital interests of the nation.

It was announced that the Supreme National Defense Council had been summoned to meet within a few days to draft plans for French military aid to Czechoslovakia in case of German attack.

Paul-Boncour notified all French ambassadors in Europe, one official said, to return to conferences on the grave international situation.

Labor Ready to Help.

Delegates of the General Confederation of Labor, representing 5,000,000 French workers, told the premier they were ready to sacrifice the 40-hour week in factories working on defense materials.

Before Germany's annexation of Austria they had refused to accept such a sacrifice.

There was increasing concern over the presence of German troops in Austria.

Officials estimated that between 200,000 and 250,000 German troops were in Austria and said such a show of strength was too imposing to be intended for little Austria alone.

Blum talked with Bank of France and treasury officials on the fall of the franc, which slid to 33.55 to the dollar, the lowest point since it was stabilized by the Poincare government in 1928.

Plans for a thousand sons and daughters of French World War veterans to make a trip into Germany were canceled abruptly "because of the course of international events."

Blum's present government, formed Sunday, was called "merely transitory" in both houses of Parliament. Observers predicted it would be replaced within a few weeks by a stronger "national safety" cabinet.

Officials were confident that if France were drawn into a war Britain would have to follow, even though Prime Minister Chamberlain has failed to state that Britain has joined France's pledge to defend Czechoslovakia. Otherwise, in the words of one diplomat, "Berlin would rule Britannia."

Democrats Hail 'Big Navy' Plea Of Wadsworth

By Sidney Olson.

A Republican, Representative James W. Wadsworth, of New York, yesterday brought round after round of applause from the Democratic majority as he made the most effective arguments yet presented for the President's "big Navy" bill.

Wadsworth, speaking quietly and "not with elation," made a pile-driver attack on the theories of isolationists and of those who would limit the operation of the American Navy to certain "zones."

Coast Guns Not Enough.

To an intently-listening membership, the tall New Yorker brought home for the first time in this debate "the realization of that grim, grim fact" that "eventually the expansion of peoples, led by dictators believing in the exercise of force in the achievement of their aims, will reach the Western Hemisphere."

He said: "Just as sure as we are sitting here, eventually the Western Hemisphere will be reached and influenced, if this terrible march of force goes on.

"When it reaches the Western Hemisphere, it reaches us.

"This bill is a realization of that grim fact. It is an indication we are learning to be masters of our own destiny.

"I cannot agree with that school which teaches us that the best way to defend the destiny of America and the only proper way is to line the seacoast with guns and dare the invader to approach.

McReynolds Also Speaks.

"The history of nations shows upon innumerable occasions that the defense of a people may have to be carried on 1,000 miles from their homes, or 5,000 miles from their homes.

"Our children and grandchildren may live to see the day in which in its own defense America may fight, off the coast of Brazil, the first naval battle of a war brought against her by an aggressor.

"That would be just as truly an act of defense and a battle of defense as if it were fought in the narrows of New York harbor."

Wadsworth's speech stood out, along with one by Representative Sam D. McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, as the only major addresses in another day of humdrum House debate as the legislative wheels ground slowly toward certain passage of the bill about Friday.

McReynolds, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, pictured the Administration's foreign policy as a means of "revitalizing the international order." He said:

"It is sufficient to say that the increases of American armaments mean not that we are about to strike out at any nation, but that rather, when the nations of the world are wearied of uneconomic armament, the consequence of bickering and economic back-biting, this Nation wishes to be in a position where it can negotiate on an equal footing with the other great powers and can then throw the full weight of its influence into the scale on the side of arms limitation and reduction."

Anti-NazisDeny Picket Ban Is Constitutional

Group Seized Near German Embassy Claims Liberties Are Infringed.

Constitutionality of the new law against picketing embassies was attacked yesterday by attorneys defending 31 men and 8 women arrested Monday while carrying anti-Nazi placards outside the German and Austrian legations here.

They were charged with violation of the act, passed by Congress last month, prohibiting picketing within 500 feet of an embassy except by permission of the superintendent of police.

At the request of Assistant District Attorney David A. Hart, Judge Edward M. Curran ordered the case continued until tomorrow morning.

The demurrer was filed by Defense Attorney Howard C. Westwood, of the legal staff of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has provided four lawyers for the group. Westwood claimed that the antipicketing act menaces freedom of speech and freedom of assembly, violates the due process clause and constitutes delegation of legislative power.

His argument before Judge Curran centered around the delegation of legislative power. According to Westwood, the power it gives the superintendent of police parallels the Presidential authority which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional in the "hot oil" and the Schechter cases.

"If he wished, the superintendent of police could grant a permit because the applicant has red hair or deny it because the applicant's name is Smith," Westwood declared. "The act provides no standard to guide him in the granting of permits."

Col. Julius Peyser, another defense attorney, quoted from the minority House report on the statute, according to which the act would allow the arrest of a man wearing a small American flag in his lapel if he walked within 500 feet of an embassy. The report also pointed out that the streets and sidewalks in front of embassies are outside the jurisdiction of the foreign government concerned.

Police said Sullivan, 26, and a guard at the Veterans' Bureau, bit Policeman Norman Gray severely, and struck Policemen H. D. Johnson and Fred Gant, of Fort Myer.

Police said Sullivan's car struck one driven by Gant at Tenth and N streets northwest. Sullivan struck Gant at the time during an argument, police continued.

He was arrested in front of his home at 1208 Fourth street southwest, by Gray and Johnson after a free-for-all fight in which Gray was bitten on the finger.

Voice Is Factor In Depressions, Optimists Told

Business depressions may be properly blamed on man's use of or abuse of his voice, a Washington educator told members of the Optimist Club yesterday noon in the Mayflower Hotel.

"The businessman's security and his success are dependent upon his voice control," declared Mrs. Anne Tillery Renshaw, head of the Renshaw School of Speech. "Business depressions are brought about by fear in the tone," she said.

Adaptability, adequacy, mood control, efficiency, reserve force are all, the speaker pointed out, important factors in the texture of the voice.

Mrs. Renshaw said lawyers are the most difficult to teach in matters of voice "because they are so combative."

"Physicians," she said, "are the easiest because they are trained to listen to the stories of their patients. Librarians often overwork the hushed tones and scientists develop the cold laboratory tone.

Body of Col. Perry Found Below Dam In Tennessee River

Fisherman, working with grappling hooks improvised from fishing tackle, Monday night succeeded in locating the body of Lieut. Col. Charles E. Perry in the Tennessee River below Wheeler Dam.

A TVA crew and volunteer searchers had sought the District Army engineer, who served here in the office of the Chief of Engineers from 1921 until 1923, for seven hours after he failed to return from inspecting the navigation lock of the dam.

Officials said Col. Perry apparently fell 65 feet from the dam.

A native of Boston, Mass., Col. Perry entered the Army in the World War as a captain in the Engineer Section, Officers Reserve Corps. He was commissioned major the following year and in 1920 entered the Regular Army with that rank. Graduate of the Command and General Staff School, Col. Berry is survived by his widow, Mrs. Katherine F. Perry, of Nashville.

Funeral will be held at Fort Myer Chapel at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow, with Chaplain Alva J. Brasted officiating. Interment will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Symphony to Play Novelties Tonight

Novelties of the seventeenth and twentieth centuries and one of the symphonic masterpieces of the nineteenth century have places on the program which Hans Kindler has arranged for the National Symphony Orchestra concert tonight in Constitution Hall. The contemporary work is William Walton's satirical and witty suite, "Facade," which is to have its first performance in Washington. Originally written for small orchestra to accompany the recitation of poems by Edith Sitwell, it has been expanded for full orchestra.

The unfamiliar music from the past includes a three-movement suite by Arcangelo Corelli (1653-1713), and two sinfonie (interludes) from Claudio Monteverdi's opera, "Orfeo," first produced in 1607. These interludes have been instrumented for modern orchestra by the distinguished Italian composer, Gian Francesco Malipiero.

The major work to be played this evening is the first symphony of Brahms, which has become thoroughly established in popularity. An entr'acte from Musorgski's "Khovanshchina" completes the program.

Allegany Welfare Leader Resigns

Cumberland, Md., March 15 (AP).—A. Charles Stewart, chairman of the Allegany County welfare board, submitted his resignation today at the board's regular meeting.

Stewart, who also is chairman of the Allegany County commissioners, said he did not think he could continue "to do justice to both jobs" because of ill health. He has been confined to his home for several weeks up until ten days ago, with an attack of influenza. He said his doctor had advised him to "let up" on his official duties.

After Stewart's resignation, the board chose the Rev. Walter Twigg, of Flintstone, to fill the unexpired term until July.

The financial report of the board was made, showing an increase of $4,400 in general public assistance expenditures for February because the board took over cases of the emergency relief committee late in January.

The Metropolitan is a mutual organization. Its assets are held for the benefit of its policyholders, and any divisible surplus is returned to its policyholders in the form of dividends.

The Human Side—for 1937

IF WE WERE to let the figures above describe the Metropolitan's activities last year, the story would be far from complete—for there is a HUMAN side of the ledger, too.

Policyholders and beneficiaries received from Metropolitan in 1937 almost $526,000,000—much of it in an hour of genuine need.

Death claims were paid on 6,107 policies in force less than three months, and on 18,562 policies in force less than one year—dramatic proof of the value of life insurance.

One could scarcely name a catastrophe which took human lives, in the United States or Canada, where funds provided by Metropolitan policies had not helped lighten the burden for afflicted families.

Each day, visiting nurses representing the Metropolitan ministered to persons insured under Industrial, Intermediate, and Group policies who were in need of skilled care. These nurses made 3,766,240 calls during the year.

Every half second during 1937, a Metropolitan booklet, containing useful health information, was placed in somebody's hands.

Each working day throughout the year, new Metropolitan investments went into communities in various parts of the United States and Canada. These investments helped to create a demand for goods, aid realty values, give employment, and serve other modern social and economic needs.

There is more we would like to tell you about our 1937 Report. This is contained in a booklet entitled, "The Human Side of the Ledger," which we shall be glad to send to you upon request.

'Mayerling' Is Realistic Play Of Hapsburgs

Picture Reopening Belasco Is Greeted by Capacity First-Night House.

By Nelson B. Bell

"MAYERLING." Paz Film picturization of Claude Anet's novel of "Idyll's End," adapted to the screen by Joseph Kessel and J. V. Cube, with musical score by Arthur Honegger, costarring Charles Boyer and Danielle Darrieux, with Vladimir Sokoloff, Suzy Prim, Jean Daz, Gabrielle Dorziat, Debucourt, Marthe Regier and Andre Dubosc. Directed by Anatole Litvak. At the Belasco Theater.

The tragic story of Archduke Rudolph of Austria, unhappiest and most frustrated of the Hapsburgs, and his encompassing but futile love of the equally ill-starred Baroness Marie Vetsera, was the magnet that served to fill every seat in the Belasco Theater last night upon the reopening of the Lafayette Square playhouse under the managerial direction of William Goldberg.

It is not difficult to perceive the reasons for the selection of "Mayerling," the film play based on Claude Arnet's novel of "Idyll's End," by the Critics Circle of New York as the best foreign-made picture of 1937. It brings to the screen with meticulous detail the complete recital of a great love, the sinister workings of court intribute and the hapless plight of two young people immersed in the grand passion and foredoomed to anguish by the pernicious connivance of those about them. Little of the joy of living has been permitted to permeate the fabric of this imposing but gloomy drama. It is burdened with heavy overtones of impending tragedy and only occasionally strikes a gay note —and then only fleetingly. But designed in the tragic mold, it perseveres in its fidelity to presumable fact and admirably sustains the keynote to which it is pitched.

A Royal Prisoner.

The action laid in Vienna in the early and late 80s, when Emperor Franz Josef and his stately Empress strove to keep their son, Rudolph, a virtual prisoner in the Hofburg, gloomiest of the royal palaces of Europe. A liberal at heart, whose closest friend was Maurice Szeps, editor of a radical paper, the handsome young archduke is spied upon, maligned and buffeted until he seeks the solace of wild night life and the kindly oblivion of drink. Then at the Prater, incognito, he meets a young and timid girl who has lost her mother and sisters in the crowd. They enjoy an innocent and rapturous evening together, neither known to the other.

At the opera they see each other again and the first flame of infatuation is fanned into the fiery fury of an overwhelming and irresistible love. Denied dissolution of the marriage he has made as an unwilling contribution to the policy of state, Rudolph first defies and then accedes to the demand of his imperial father that the measalliance must end. On the night of one of the gayest of the court balls, he and the Baroness Marie slip away to the hunting lodge at Mayerling and spend an idyllic day and night together. In the fulfillment of the pact they have made in their great love, Rudolph fires a shot at daybreak. A few moments later he fires another. The romance of Rudolph and Marie is at an end.

Under the direction of Anatole Litvak, "Mayerling" has been executed in the typical European manner. Too much use has been made of the familiar device of double-exposure and superimposed scenes, and, to many, it will seem that time has been wasted in detailing the minutiae of a story that could have been told in shorter and sharper terms, but the fact remains that, in the final analysis, this is a film that has been dedicated to a rigid observance of realistic effect and a substantial building of both character and situation.

Preserves Authenticity.

Photographically, the picture lacks the brillance and glittering beauty of the Hollywood mode and its most expansive panoramas fall short of the American cinema's Gargantuan proportions, but one senses that its treatment conforms proportionately more to the requirements of reality than might be achieved by a more flamboyant display of the cameras' ability to embrace magnitude at the sacrifice of authenticity.

The play is spoken in French, with English subtitles that fail, as usual, to interpret more than a fragment of the dialogue that is delivered. Even so, the action of the drama is so clarified by the skill of the pivotal players that complete comprehension of the development of events is not difficult.

In the role of the Archduke Rudolph, Charles Boyer offers a portrayal that seemed to me to fall something short of the inspired piece of work he contributed to the screen as Napoleon in "Conquest," with Greta Garbo. His performance, nevertheless, is one that must command respectful attention. As the Baroness Vetsera, that prodigious young actress, Dahielle Darrieux, proves her right to have been accorded a million dollar contract in Hollywood. Here is a young woman of exceptional beauty—of an ingenuous and ethereal sort—whose wide eyes and utter youthfulness make her an ideal choice for the role of the child who fell in love with an older and a profligate member of a reigning house. Mlle. Darrieux, I should say, outshines every other member of the cast.

Support and Subsidiaries.

The supporting ensemble, with the exception of Vladimir Sokoloff, is virtually unknown to American audiences, but nonetheless capable on that account. Suzy Prim and Marthe Regier are especially effective, in the foremost of the subordinate feminine roles, and an actor programmed only as Debucourt is a properly offensive Count Taffe.

"Mayerling" is supplemented on the Belasco's inaugural bill by a newsreel devoted largely to the beauty of Washington's governmental edifices; a particularly appealing short reel, called "Grey Owl's Little Brother"—the story of an Indian and his pals among the beavers, and that hilarious Walt Disney Technicolor Silly Symphony, "Three Orphan Kittens."

The Belasco takes on new stature as an amusement place of the first rank with this bill.

Directing.

Norman Foster, only recently a popular leading man, is now directing films for 20th Century-Fox. His most recent effort is Claire Trevor's "Walking Down Broadway."

Winners Announced in Bureau's Second Contest; Eight Contestants Eligible for Future Greatness

Theresa Helburn, Bureau and Theater Guild Executive, Sees Promise in College Playwrights; "Spanish Road" Postponed; New Summer Theater Project: Deanna Durbin Here Tomorrow; Theater Notes.

DECISIONS were handed down yesterday on the 159 plays submitted by college students and recent graduates in the Bureau of New Plays' Nation-wide Second Play Competition.

Theresa Helburn, director of the Bureau of New Plays and one of the executive directors of the Theater Guild, announced for the bureau—which was established two years ago with funds supplied by seven major motion picture producing companies to discover and encourage young authors with financial aid and professional criticism—that three authors will receive awards and fellowships. Honorable mention and professional critical advice will be given to five additional authors.

BELL.

Following are the decisions of judges Ina Claire, Prof. Sawyer Falk, Producers Alfred de Liagre, jr., and Delos Chappell, and Theresa Helburn, ex-officio:

Fellowship of $1,500 to Helen Hanff, Philadelphia, Pa., who attended Temple University, for her play, "These Your Children" and other work, and to Philip Freund, New York City, graduate of Cornell University, for his play, "Fire-Bringers" and other work. Award of $500 to Daniel Taradash, Hollywood, Calif., graduate of Harvard University, for his play, "Thy Mercy."

Honorable mention was accorded John M. Caldwell, New York, graduate of the University of Michigan; Nicholas Beal Jacobson, Norwich, Vt., Dartmouth and Massachusetts State College; Rosalie Moore, Berkeley, Calif., graduate of the University of California; Thomas R. Moore, New York, College of the City of New York, and Dr. Winn F. Zeller, Whittier, Calif., graduate of Berea College and the University of Iowa.

In this connection it is interesting that Robert Wetzel, who won an award in last year's "First Play Competition," after working for some time on revisions with the aid of the Bureau of New Plays, has sold his play to the Theater Guild for fall production. Norman Rosten, winner of a scholarship, has been at the University of Michigan and "This Proud Pilgrimage," one of his scholarship plays, has just been produced there. Alan Coutts is in New York on his fellowship and is at work on two manuscripts. Others who gained recognition are similarly engaged.

I repeat that this matter is dwelt upon here again because the Bureau of New Plays seems to offer the most promising outlet available at the present time in this country for the dramatic works of embryo authors. Correspondents—and there are many of them—wishing to know how to dispose of their brain-children should write to the Bureau of New Plays and not to me. Let that be a warning to you!

The Washington New Theater's presentation of "The Spanish Road," originally scheduled to open in Pierce Hall tonight, has been postponed until March 22. It will be presented also on March 24, 29 and 30. Tickets dated March 16 and 17 will be honored on March 22 and 24, respectively, and those dated March 22 and 24 will be similarly honored on March 29 and 30, respectively. If any other readjustment is necessary, the easiest solution will be to call DI. 1445, or call at 1410 H street northwest, Room 100. And don't say I didn't tell you as soon as I found all this out myself.

It seems once again that a summer theater project, serving both Washington and Baltimore, is about to be consummated. The same thing has seemed imminent numerous times before, but this time it appears that the idea might "stick."

On Monday, Leonard B. McLaughlin, managing director of the Auditorium and Maryland theaters, in Baltimore; Harold C. Smith, prominent Montgomery County attorney and judge of the police court in Rockville, and Stephen E. Cochran, former manager of the National Theater and founder of the National Academy of Stage Training, joined forces for the formation of a new corporation for the purpose of erecting a summer theater at Olney, Md. This would be a resumption of the development of the "Woodlawn Lodge" property into a summer theater colony not unlike those which flourish on Cape Cod, in Maine and at other points on the Eastern Seaboard.

The site of the new enterprise possesses the distinct advantage of being about midway between the National Capital and Baltimore. It is the center of a region that offers a fine prospect of what almost might be termed "resident" patronage, in addition to the theatergoers who might be drawn from both of the major cities that form the outer limits of its potential "draw." A great many important thoroughfares converge on the property that may become a "hot weather" Mecca for seekers after theatrical entertainment of assured worth.

At least, the proposed undertaking has the initial benefit of the accumulated sagacity of showmen who have had many decades of experience in the theater. Included among these also will be George Vivian, director of the National Academy of Stage Training, who also is to be on the board of directors of the new organization.

* * * *

Speaking of the National Academy, etc., Director George Vivian is not one to let the grass grow under his feet. Having only a few days ago presented his graduating class in a series of one-act plays, dancing and fencing exhibitions and whatnot, he now announces that the new spring, ten-week term will open next Monday, March 21. At the end of this semester, he again will present his pupils in a two-night demonstration of "public theater," during which the one-act play once more will be featured as his notion of what is best adapted to the interpretative talents of newcomers to the stage.

It will be interesting tomorrow to observe in what manner and to what extent her sudden elevation to the top flight of screen stars may have affected the youthful charm of Deanna Durbin, who leaped to fame in "Three Smart Girls," achieved a major triumph in "One Hundred Men and a Girl" and soon will be seen and heard on the screen in "Mad About Music."

Miss Durbin is coming to town for the usual round of sight-seeing, during which she will be under the protective wing of Manager Hardie Meakin of RKO-Keith's Theater, where her pictures are shown. It has been bruited about, as the saying is, that Miss Durbin, at the age of 15, is quite a lady, upon whose consciousness is beginning to grow something of the importance of clothes and boys. I suspect that that is a bit on the side of imaginative ballyhoo, concocted by the New York interviewers who already have been privileged to enjoy the Durbin ingenuousness.

Perhaps Friday morning will find something here on the subject. At least one of us hopes so.

It will come out sooner or later, anyhow, so it might just as well be said here and now that the "Robert" Gilbert, programmed in the role of Wakefield in "Whiteoaks," currently starring Ethel Barrymore at the National Theater, in reality is Ruth Gilbert, a talented young actress impressed into the part for this engagement as a result of the District's asinine child labor law that excludes the male youngster who scored a hit in the juvenile character prior to the advent of the Mazo de la Roche play to Washington. Miss Gilbert gives a fine account of herself and is boyish enough for all practical purposes. However, when you see the play you might suspect the voice and the knees, so you might as well know now.

* * * *

If you ever get that far away from home, you might care to know that "Seven From Shaw," a cycle of man and civilization as told in seven plays by George Bernard Shaw, will be the feature of the Pasadena Community Playhouse's fourth annual Midsummer Drama Festival, scheduled for June 27 to August 13.

The seven plays, each slated for one week's showing, will be presented in the following order: "Arms and the Man," "Major Barbara," "Heartbreak House," "On the Rocks" and "Back to Methuselah," the latter to be broken down into three parts.

As in past years, a steady stream of worthwhile tangent events will concur in the staging of the festival at California's State Theater.

* * * *

Yesterday's hurried, but unharried, caller at the drayma desk was Tom Kane, momentarily in town in the interest of an item known as "You Can't Take It With You," which happens to have been a Pulitzer Prize winner. It will follow Cole Porter's "You Never Know" at the National and will return to a Washington stage the most popular leading woman ever presented by the old Columbia Theater Players, probably the most widely known stock company in the annals of the theater in Washington. That would be Charlotte Walker. Remember?

Speediest of the Tap Dancers

ELEANORE WHITNEY,

one of the featured members of the cast in Paramount's production of "The Thrill of a Lifetime," coming to the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday. The diminutive Miss Whitney gained her first screen renown as one of the swiftest of the gatling-gun tap artistes, whose steps were "clocked" at amazing velocity. She is cofeatured with Johnny Downs in a cast that includes Ben Blue and the Yacht Club Boys.

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., March 15.—Going to see a preview of a Bob Leonard directed picture is like a visit with old friends. Bob, a young old-timer himself, gives the old-timers a real break. And now they romp home:

You've guessed it—I'm referring to "The Girl of the Golden West." The first friend was Charley Grapewin. His old father in "The Good Earth" stood shoulder to shoulder with the stars, and sometimes he seemed to grow above them.

HEDDA HOPPER.

And how wonderful to see Noah Beery in a good part again. You know, there's a human interest story if there ever was one.

After his magnificent performance in "Beau Geste" his brother, Wally, got a big contract at another studio. Of course they publicized him to the skies. They couldn't have two Beerys in the limelight at the same time, so Noah stepped down and almost out. It happened that during this time his wife decided to fall in love with a younger man.

Noah had put a little money by and devised a scheme of taking care of his old age. You might call it trout farming. Anyway, the Noah Beery trout farm has been supplying the better tables and restaurants in our city. The floods came and took care of that, wiping it completely out.

Noah is back in his stride again. I'm hoping that jobs will continue to come through and he'll build up to the success he so richly deserves.

How the little girls from Brooklyn come tripping into Hollywood to fool the master minds.

Sigrid Curie isn't the first one. Who was it said a clever woman can get anything she wants if she goes after it the right way? The boys looking for glamour fall like tenpins.

You've probably forgotten that our first platinum blonde—even before Jean Harlow—put over a similar hoax on Cecil B. DeMille. She took the name of Sonia Karloff. Her real one was Joan Williams. She was a Brooklyn show girl. What an accent! What a blonde! What a build-up! She was Europe's gift to America. Signed on a long-term contract. Given an important part. After one picture she was paid off and sent—well, nobody knows where she is today. Brooklyn, probably.

As I remember, the one who really crashed through, after she had fooled 'em was Margaret Lindsay, who came from the Middle West with an English accent. Got that poignant part in "Cavalcade," she was half of the honeymoon couple before the boat went down. She's just done a fine job in "Jezebel," hasn't been doing badly with Alfred Vanderbilt. At least, he's taken her out oftener than any other girl in town.

Then there was Dorothy Hale, supposedly a blueblood from New York, who Sam Goldwyn met on the boat coming through the Panama Canal. She was perfect for "Cynara," oposite Ronnie Colman. Got a year's contract. Coached by Laura Hope Crewes. Laura gets $1,000 a week for that service. But —Kay Francis played the part. Dorothy is now back in New York.

Oh yes, gals, we've made a mighty big mistake being proud of the fact that we're good old Americans. If we'd have cultivated that "furrin" manner and accent, we might have lots more money in the bank, but we wouldn't have had so much fun.

Eddie Robinson, who's just added another Renoir to his art collection, walks blocks to save a quarter on parking. So do I. Then I'll pay $25 for a new hat.

Janet Chapman, now child actress at Warners, tried to get on the Kay Francis set. It was closed. She said, "Why?—I just wanted to learn. When I grow up I'm going to be good enough so that anybody can watch me."

William Murdock, who once owned a florist shop, does nothing else but arrange flowers for RKO pictures.

Speaking of flowers, Irving Sindler, property man on "Garden of Allah," did some lightning thinking. Property men, like the Northwest Mounted Police, always get what they're sent after. The director had made a bet he would stump Sindler. He was ordered, in the middle of the desert, to bring fresh flowers for a certain scene and have them there in three hours. That stopped him, but only for a moment. He borrowed a car, dashed to the nearest railway stop, flagged the streamliner and boarded it. Then he went through the dining car like a whirlwind. Collected flowers from each table (which stunned passengers and crew into inactivity) and said, "thanks" as he jumped off the train. Delivered the flowers half and hour before the time allotted. The bet, which he knew nothing about, was paid to him.

Youthful Actress Gets First Kiss

Making her initial escape from the unyielding chaperonage of her French parentage, Olympe Bradna, 17-year-old screen star, today was kissed on the mouth by a young man for the first time in her life.

The pleasure of introducing Olympe to the romantic embrace went to Gene Raymond, who is appearing with her in "Stolen Heaven," the picture which is bringing her to the screen as the first new star of 1938.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Woman Engaged to Be Married Meets Old Sweetheart; They Love Each Other Still; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About eight years ago I was desperately in love with a very fine man who returned my affection. However, I was in ill health at the time and he was not financially able to marry, so we were content to remain friends and await more favorable developments of fortune. After two years of waiting, his business took him to South America. We corresponded for a time and then my letters remained unanswered, so I concluded he had lost interest and discontinued writing.

* * * *

As time progressed I made new acquaintances and am now engaged to an equally fine man who cares for me devotedly and of whom I am very fond, although not in the same way, or with the same intensity, as I cared for the other man. Since I don't believe in discussing past friendships with present admirers, I have never mentioned the other man to my fiance.

* * * *

Now, the other man has returned to this country for good and is in a position to marry. We have found that the old love still exists and he wants to marry me. He said my letters went unanswered because he was seriously ill at the time with a tropical fever and when he recovered and heard no more from me, he thought the same as I had thought about him.

* * * *

My fiance, naturally, is not responsible for this state of affairs and I hesitate to hurt him, yet I don't feel that I should marry him while loving another, for surely there would be no justice in that. So the question I wish to ask you is this: Should I give up the present man whom I am supposed to marry next September and marry the other man in June? Or should I remain faithful to the man who has done nothing to deserve being jilted? I still love and have always secretly cared for the first man, although I had figured, temporarily, that he was out of the picture for good. I would like your advice before I take the matter up with my fiance. I know what I would like to do, but don't know whether it would be fair play, and I wish to be fair with every one.

EVELYN.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR EVELYN: You can only be fair to yourself through marrying the man you love, supposing, of course, that he is a fine person and really deserving of your love. You can only be fair to the man you don't love, or rather, care for in a lesser degree than you care for the other man, by telling him so quite frankly and asking to be released from the engagement. It would, indeed, be working an undeserved injustice upon him to marry him, out of sheer moral cowardice, when you know beyond the shadow of a doubt that you do not love him as deeply as it is possible for you to love and when, moreover, your heart is actually given to someone else.

* * * *

It is to be regretted that he is so little prepared for such a painful blow to his hopes and emotions; that you had never, at any time, mentioned the existence of another man in your life. I can see that native good taste and well-bred reticence might have dictated such silence, in some measure; and yet, I wonder if a brittle sort of pride were not likewise a bit responsible for your omission in this regard. I daresay you didn't want him to get the idea you had ever been a woman scorned or jilted.

* * * *

However, you can only expiate for this silence now by telling the whole story, courageously and contritely, giving him fully to understand that one important reason why you are breaking the engagement is because you know him to be deserving of something better than half a loaf in the way of wifely devotion. M. H.

* * * *

Advice for "Puzzled."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have just finished reading the letter from "Puzzled" and your reply to her, published in The Post of March 12. Married over two years, with an infant son 6 months old, she claims to be no longer in love with her husband, says she does love another man and asks whether to continue in the marriage for her child's sake, or whether to seek a divorce and marry the other man. I urge her to pray to God for guidance, that she may be shown what a terrible mistake she would be making in leaving her husband and taking her baby away from his father.

* * * *

I am a mother of two babies. One was born 10 months after my wedding and the other came on the date of my second wedding anniversary. It has been hard, adjusting my life to include two babies and a husband I hadn't learned to know before the babies came. But I have found that if one tries hard to think about the happiness of others, and not about one's own happiness, that married love survives and thrives.

* * * *

This wife is deceiving herself in blaming "death of love" for her wish to leave her husband. The real reason is a childish desire to escape from circumstances and surroundings that have visited upon her painful experiences that are concomitant with individual growth. If she had really loved her husband in the first place, her love would not have died within the space of two short years. It is her desire to escape from reality which makes her think love has died.

* * * *

Time is a wonderful healer and adjuster. She should give herself time to regain that "lost love." She can build an even greater love for her husband, now that she has the baby to aid the growth of that love. Six-month-old babies are so lovable; they can do so much to bring two parents together. My advice to "Puzzled" is to forget the other man; he is just an excuse. Has his love for her been tested and proven as her husband's love has been? Her husband's love has triumphed over the sacrifices he was called upon to make both before and after the baby's birth and is something to count upon. Can she say as much of the other man's?

* * * *

There comes a time in every life for unselfish sacrifice. I urge this wife to sacrifice her own feelings of the moment; to pray to God for guidance, and to let her husband and her baby show her the way back to real love. Let her give her husband the chance he deserves for redeeming himself in her eyes.

JUST A MOTHER.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Chamois, Doeskin Gloves May Be Washed on Hand

Gloves should be measured before washing so that they can be pulled to their proper shape before drying. Or you may want to use a wire glove frame instead.

Don't be afraid to massage your suede or kid or fabric gloves right on your hand with plentiful, thick suds. Because the seams of chamois and doeskin are apt to weaken and split when wet, it is best to wash them off the hands. Be gentle when turning them inside out to wash the inner surface. The first rinse should be slightly soapy, and the three succeeding rinses of clear, lukewarm water. Before they are completely dry, work them a little with your fingers to limber them up.

In Smart Spring Styling

NOW is the time to start knitting costumes for spring and summer, and after you have viewed the new styles and the colorful yarns of intriguing textures, you will not want to waste a minute in getting started. The dress above, number 2644, is an excellent example of the latest stylings which emulate fabrics; the skirt is knitted to give the illusion of pleats and the bodice has a smart overblouse effect. It is a style which would be equally adaptable to spring or summer, depending upon the yarn used; wool, cotton, wool and silk, or any of the new mixtures. The model pictured here is made of bretton tweed. For knitting instructions, send a 3-cent stamp to Ethel Ehlen, Fashion Editor of The Washington Post.

New Prizes Offered For Recipes With Use of Pineapple

The mere mention of fresh pineapple on these early spring days is apt to start an attack of wanderlust. Those susceptible will vision tropical fields, waving palm trees and golden, sweet-meated pineapple, carted in by bare-footed workers. The crisp texture and slightly tart taste of this fruit make it a perfect spring dish, and markets this week are abundantly supplied.

What is your secret of serving the fresh pineapple so that it gains the maximum success? For recipes featuring either fresh or canned pineapple The Post is awarding five cash prizes. The first is $3, the second $2, and there are three cash prizes of $1 each.

To enter the contest, write out your favorite pineapple recipe, giving complete directions for preparation, and mail to Jean Green, The Post Food Editor, before March 19.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Measles in Epidemic.

Before the great war, measles occurred epidemically every year. But since the tremendous epidemic which hit the soldiers of the United States Army, statistics show that in this country measles is epidemic every three or four years, usually in the winter and spring months.

According to health departments in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois, 1938 looks like a measles year. No great alarm need be felt about it, however, because on comparison of the period of 1903-1914, with the period of 1919-1934, there has been a drop of 71 per cent in measles mortality.

Personally, my experience in the Army inclines me to believe that it is just as well for children to have measles and get it over with. I realize that this is unorthodox and that many pediatricians and public health officials believe that children should be prevented from having measles.

My experience was that troops that came from the city where contacts were most frequent, usually had had measles and got through their first weeks in camp quite well. But boys from the country where epidemics of infectious disease are infrequent, most of whom had never had measles, came down with a very severe form, were very much sicker than young children.

Recent advances in the handling of measles have included the identification of the disease by the use of a dye called "nigrosin." This strikes me as rather far-fetched because a doctor should be able to recognize measles, especially in the presence of an epidemic, in 99 out of 100 cases, by signs and symptoms. The sequence of symptoms is as follows:

A child of 4 or 5 has a fever, within 12 hours red eyes, then a cold, last the rash appears a few hours later, and the fever falls.

Helping Housewives Buy Wisely Opens Business Field to Women

New Study Released by Institute of Professional Relations.

By Malvina Lindsay.

AMERICAN housewives, through their increasing efficiency, are indirectly helping other women find jobs in the business world. Through their determination to have the right vitamins and calories for their families, to make use of the best methods and equipment in their kitchens, and to get the most for their dollar, they are opening a field of consumer service that, so far, seems about the only feminine calling not rated among the "overcrowded professions."

This encouraging news is offered in a study entitled "Business Opportunities for the Home Economist," made by the Institute of Professional Relations, under direction of Chase Going Woodhouse, the institute director. A dinner and symposium to celebrate the completion of the study will be held tonight at the American Women's Association in New York. Mrs. Catherine Filene Shouse, of Washington, chairman of the board of directors of the institute, will preside and will present the book, which has just been published by the McGraw-Hill Co., to Miss Mary M. Hughart, Connecticut director of the Women's and Professional Projects, WPA. Miss Anne Morgan, president of the association, is chairman of the meeting.

To Aid Consumer.

In order to help young women in planning careers and finding jobs, the Institute of Professional Relations has devoted its major efforts during the last three years to a study of trends in occupations. More than 600 educators and business women aided in the present study, which has revealed that "the consumer wants help" and that the trained home economist is the one to give it. Summarizing the situation, the study says:

"Today the home economics field seems as promising as any for educated women. It will not absorb masses of workers, but the number of reasonably good jobs should increase steadily and there should be a number of very good jobs for women of outstanding ability."

Among the fields that business is offering to the home economist, according to the study, are: Food manufacturing and distribution, including dairy councils, tea rooms, cafeterias, restaurants, hotels, dietetics work in institutions, household equipment, including work in public utilities—as electricity, gas, ice, etc.; textile manufacture and clothes design and distribution; advertising, radio, photography, journalism, food consultation; advisory work in banks, stores, etc; housing, including decoration.

How to Prepare.

How, then, should the girl who wants to enter this field prepare? First, says the study, by getting a basic education in the sciences and in home economics. Some apprentice training in institutions during vacations is also a great help. She should have a cultural background and know the social amenities, be able to practice "good manners and good will." Ability to write and speak are assets—even necessities. And, of course, the home economist should exemplify the good health and zestful living she is preaching to others.

Every girl of today who is seeking or holding a job of any kind will profit by the advice the study presents on the intangible qualities that make for feminine business success. Many executives and employers were interviewed for this part of the study. Concerning employes' attitudes, here were the two chief points they stressed:

First, willingness to take responsibility—as one executive expressed it, "to carry your share of the load and handle your own troubles."

Second, willingness to work up from the bottom and "not expect to get to the top overnight."

One department head complained that young women from colleges could not "take hold of opportunity seriously for themselves." "I assign them work," she said, "and they slide through it as they are accustomed to through their lessons. They come back complacently and ask 'What do you want me to do next?'"

Want to Be "Big Shots."

Another executive complained of certain college graduates as "wanting top jobs, with no sense that there is anything to do or learn in order to qualify for them. When I give them a chance," she said, "it isn't three months before they are sure that they are too big for the job, their abilities are not recognized and they are being discriminated against."

The book stresses the importance of being able to work with men in a dignified, friendly and impersonal manner and of knowing business etiquette and manners. Also young women must learn to be co-operative and work for the good of an organization rather than their own personal glory. And this, the study points out, will often mean giving up their best ideas to men and executives. Regarding the general man-woman relationship in business, the study offers this advice:

"The business women who take a realistic point of view of the present situation agree that the right business attitude for women today is to give, and guard carefully against the appearance of giving or appearing too bright; above all, against boasting, pushing or any form of exhibitionism. That is not idealistic; it is self-preservation, protective coloring. Men's increasing fear resistance to women is largely subconscious, caused by the depression but it is a fact. To accept it and disarm it as far as possible is the only practical course."

MRS. CHASE GOING WOODHOUSE, who directed study on occupational opportunities.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

THERE ARE openings and openings along the Broadway theater belt. Some are shy little things that creep feebly and hopefully into the momentary blast of the first-night spotlight, attended dutifully by the driven critics and that little group of plush-lined people who have nothing else to do but stare and be stared at. And some are white-hot events that crack society pages as well as the theatrical columns, and cause a five-minute hullabaloo.

ALICE HUGHES

Some of the latter come as a matter of course. Shows produced by the Theatre Guild and Gilbert Miller attract the big and beauteous bees like honey pots. Some, on the other hand, are as carefully engineered as Old 999 on a down grade—strictly for the sweet uses of publicity, and to give a possible cripple a crutch. Of such may not be the kingdom of Heaven, but of such was the recent premiere of a revue called "Who's Who!"

To give the opera a shove off the mark, no less a personage than Miss Elsa Maxwell was announced as "presenting." You know Miss Elsa—she hurls parties to slay the appalling boredom of the idle and unimaginative rich. Naturally, this tour de force yanked scores of her fancy friends into the theater. There they all were—filling the first few rows with flash and fiddle-faddle. They were all what newspapermen call "names"—at least, of their sort. Mrs. Dodge Sloane, auto heiress and owner of Cavalcade; Baron de Guinsbourg squiring Tallo Bankhead; on less than Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, crowned queen of the ultra-ultra; Cole Porter and the Vicomte Sosthenes de la Rochefoucauld (whew!); the Countess di Frasso; the Angier Biddle Dukes, ace young marrieds

* * * *

Dozens more. There they sat, all rich and glittering and classy, lured to a first night in the lovely name of publicity. Miss Maxwell had done it again!

Postscript. "Who's Who" died, laid an egg, flopperooed. The paths of glory and Elsa Maxwell lead but to the grave, and let her deny that!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Tomorrow the Irish march by the countless thousands. It is the only parade permitted to pass through the big business section of Fifth avenue during business hours. And it is certainly one of the great parades of our time. The band of the Fighting Irish Sixty-ninth plays the regimental air, "Garry Owen," as it passes St. Patrick's Cathedral, at Fiftieth street, where the venerable Cardinal Hayes sits and takes the salute.

* * * *

We've been having a mighty fine chinaware exhibit here—the things being the work of Walter Scott Lenox, of Trenton, who makes the ware higned with his name. Since 1918 he has been supplying state dinner sets of 100 pieces to the White House, simple, rich and beautiful. It is said that Mr. Lenox's handiwork is the only product in this country which equals foreign craftsmanship. At any rate, I wish you could see the things!

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

No Need to Catch Cold or Lose Disposition While Your Reducing.

By Ida Jean Kain.

"WHAT WOULD you do if every time you went on a diet you felt weak, lost your disposition and caught a cold? That is exactly what happens to me, and yet I am much too fat and want to reduce!"

Since this letter is typical of many I receive from overweights, I want to tell you in detail what to do under those circumstances. Reverse the process of dieting to reduce and eat to take off weight. Any reducing diet that makes you feel weak either lacks some food you should be getting or is too low in calories. The foods that give strength to a reducing diet are one liberal serving of lean meat or two small servings a day, one egg and one or two glasses of skim milk or buttermilk. These foods not only stick to the ribs and give substance to a reducing diet, but they supply protein, calcium and iron, which are essential in any diet.

Don't Skip Vitamins.

No reducing diet should be shy on vitamins. One-half glass of orange juice or grapefruit juice or one glass of tomato juice and a second fruit of some kind should be used daily. Because of their Vitamin C content, these fruits tend to increase your feeling of well being. Avoid dates, prunes, figs and raisins, which have a high calorie count. Apples, pears, tangerines, fresh strawberries, pineapple and bananas are all made to order for the reducer. They are delicious, low in calories and helpful in the prevention of constipation caused by a decrease in the quantity of the food intake.

Your real sacrifice on a reducing program will be desserts. Of course, you love them, but the delectable desserts are so high in calories that if they are included part of the protective foods must be left out—the reason you feel weak and edgy on a reducing diet.

Your real sacrifice will be in giving up high-calorie desserts.

Try Cooked Vegetables.

Be sure to have two cooked vegetables every day. Spinach, carrots and tomatoes are particularly good for the reducer because they supply Vitamin A, but choose the vegetables you like best and have one-half cup servings of two vegetables. A raw vegetable salad is excellent since it is filling without being in the least fattening. If you dislike mineral oil dressing, don't use it, but count your regular French dressing at 65 calories per tablespoon. The bigger the salad the better.

Please don't overlook the importance of milk in your diet. You will feel better for having two glasses of skim milk or buttermilk every day.

Use three or four slices of whole grain bread every day. Have the slices thin so that the butter will seem like more. The butter should be limited to one and one-half pats per day for, as you know, fats are two and one-fourth times as fattening as the other food elements.

If You Catch Cold.

If you catch cold on a reducing diet, take one Vitamin A capsule daily. Vitamin A comes in both haliver and codliver oil capsules and in this concentrated form adds a negligible number of calories. Better health does not mean excess weight, and one of these capsules daily will increase your sense of well being and build up your resistance to colds.

Use only a little salt and not more than one glass of liquid with your meals, but between meals drink eight glasses of water.

To lose weight in the right places you must exercise. Fifteen minutes of exercise daily concentrated on your worst measurements will do the most surprising things for your figure. In order to keep that fresh complexion and a feeling of exuberance you need to walk at least 1 mile a day in the fresh air.

On such a program I will guarantee that you will lose 1 to 2 pounds per week, fee' fit as a fiddle and lose in the right spots. You will look better and feel younger.

Your dietitian,
IDA JEAN KAIN.

Two Musical Events Draw Social Notables

Miss Elizabeth Vandenberg Appears as Guest Pianist With Civic Orchestra; Noted Diva Appears at Yugoslav Legation Recital.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Society continues its whirl—to music. Last evening found scores of top-flight notables either at the musicale at the Yugoslav Legation, or at the concert of the Washington Civic Orchestra, directed by Kurt Hetzel and featuring Miss Elizabeth Vandenberg as piano soloist. Several social lights managed to get to both events.

Mme. Zinka Milanova, of the Metropolitan Opera, was guest artist at the Yugoslav Legation. Formerly with the opera in Zagred, Yugoslavia's second largest city, the noted singer also won wide acclaim in Vienna and Prague. Last summer, in Salsburg, she was appearing as concert soloist with Toscanini, when a "Met" scout discovered her and brought her to New York.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Following Mme. Milanova's varied program last evening, Mme. Constantin Fotich, wife of the Yugoslav Minister, presented the artist with a huge bouquet of American beauty roses tied in ribbons of blue, white and red—Yuoslavia's national colors.

Preceding the musicale, the Minister and Mrs. Fotich entertained at dinner for the British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay. Receiving in the drawing room, Mme. Fotich was gowned in gold lame, made with a full skirt and fitted bodice. Shortly after their arrival, guests were ushered into the dining room, where they found their places at two tables, which were decorated with tall white tapers in silver candelabra, and low vases filled with blue iris and white tapers.

Many Notables Among Dinner Guests

In the company, in addition to the guest of honor, were the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin; the Swiss Minister and Mme. Marc Peter; the Minister of Finland and Mme. Eero Jarnefelt; the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Vladimir Hurban; Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, Senator Key Pittman, the Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. Victor Mallet, the Counselor of the Italian Embassy and Signora Giuseppi Cosmelli, the Military Attache of the Polish Embassy and Mme. Andrzej Chramiec, George Duca, of the Rumanian Legation.

Also the Yugoslav Consul General in New York, Bozidar Seoianovitch; Mme. Grouitch, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Ernest Draper, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Pierrepont Moffat, Miss Mabel Boardman, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins and Miss Alice Dodge.

Among the 50 guests coming in later for the musicale were the Peruvian Ambassador, Manuel de Freyre y Santander; Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, the Italian Ambassador and Donna Matilde de Suvich, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom, and their daughter, Miss Vera Bloom; Mrs. George Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph C. Miller, the Bulgarian Minister and Mme. Dimitri Naoumoff, the Netherlands Minister and Mme. van Haersma de With, the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos, and the Turkish Ambassador, Munir Ertegun.

Following the musicale, supper was served at a long table in the dining room.

Crowded Scene at Army-Navy Club

At the luncheon hour yesterday, the sixth-floor dining room of the Army-Navy Club seemed to be filled to the last table. "The air-corps wives are lunching here today," a waiter explained. "But wait—there's a small table across the room." So there was—and in a location from which you could see not only "the air-corps wives" but a number of others who had dropped in for luncheon. The Ambassador of Ecuador—a West Point graduate—was there with his wife, Senora Dona de Alfaro . . . Across the room were Mrs. Amos Fries and her daughter, Mrs. Frederic Henney, and on down the line of table were Mrs. Frederick W. Boschen and her daughter, Miss Betty Boschen.

On the floor above, that unique organization, the Post Mortem Club, was holding forth at its regular weekly meeting. Paul V. McNutt, high commissioner of the Philippines and a member of the club, was on hand for the luncheon, and reports drifting down from the seventh floor to the sixth had it that the gathering was one of the liveliest of the season.

The club membership is made up of past and present national officers, department commanders and adjutants of the American Legion, but the organization is purely social. There are no dues, and no assessments. Political and religious discussions are barred, formal speeches are prohibited, and all meetings are definitely off the record.

Organized in the fall of 1935, the Post Mortem Club got under way with Thomas M. Owen, jr., as its president. He still is. Other officers are Albert Cox as vice president, and Darrell T. Lane, as secretary and treasurer.

Among the 65 members are the Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring; Louis Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War; Oscar Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Interior; J. M. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce; Senator Ryan Duffy, Senator Bennett Champ Clark; Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries; Maj. Gen. Albert H. Blanding, Representative Pete Jarman, Representative Bertrand Gearhart, Representative Dudley White, Pleas Greenlee, James Morris, Thomas Mason, Joe Malloy, Vincent Miles, Edward L. Marthill and John Lewis Smith, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, of the Veterans' Administration, is the only honorary member.

The Clarks Return From Stay in West

Col. and Mrs. Edward B. Clark have returned to Washington after a 10-week visit in California and Hawaii. In Long Beach, Santa Barbara, Oakland and Saratoga, they were guests of families of four retired general officers of the United States Army, all of whom were classmates of Col. Clark at West Point.

In Hawaii, Gen. Charles D. Herron, commanding officer at Schofield Barracks, detailed an aide to conduct Col. and Mrs. Clark on an inspection tour of the post. Mrs. Bicknell, the widow of the late Col. Ernest P. Bicknell, of the Red Cross, had written to Hawaiian officials regarding the visit of the Clarks, with the result that the latter were given a special opportunity to learn methods of Red Cross work in the islands.

Spending three weeks on the island on which Honolulu is located, Col. and Mrs. Clark explored some of the outlying districts, witnessed the native dances and heard the native songs and visited a number of hospitals and homes for the aged.

This strange rigamarole is a figure for one of the square dances which are breaking out like a rash among sophisticates. Tomorrow evening, Ralph Teffeteller, hailed as "the greatest caller of all time," will lead a nimble group through the maze of "Little Brown Jug," "Ocean Wave," "Buffalo Gal," "Howell's Victory" and other oddly named songs at 8:30 o'clock in the Holton Arms Gym.

"TEFFY" HAS BEEN on a tour of the country introducing mountain dances to eager audiences, his last having been students at Smith College. Tomorrow's party is for the benefit of the Highlander Folk School at Monteagle, Tenn., a mountain community where tough economic conditions have deprived the people of practically everything except a folk culture accumulated through centuries. "Teffy," who is a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, as well as a great square dancer, teaches at the Highlander School, to which people trudge for miles and miles for the only recreation they ever have known.

A special corps of violinists is being imported from the Virginia mountains for tomorrow's party. Among Washington square dancers, some of whom will participate, are Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding, Miss Laura Tuckerman, Mr. and Mrs. L. Metcalfe Walling, the Misses Helen and Cynthia Davis, Theodore Dominick and about a hundred others.

ANENT GOURMETS: Washington is to have a branch of the famous New York "Amis d'Escoffier," an organization whose members meet from time to time to savor terrapin cooked in sherry, Chateau Yquem, and other good things. Only men will be allowed to join. Headquarters will be at the Raleigh.

Here are some of the rules for the dinners: The napkin must be worn tucked under the chin . . . Smoking will be absolutely forbidden up to the time dessert is served, as officials of the society say a person who smokes while eating does not deserve the title of gourmet . . . Persons under the influence of liquor will not be permitted to sit at the table, and further to enhance enjoyment of the meals, no speeches will be allowed.

Members will be encouraged to tell anecdotes, but "under no circumstances will the talker be permitted to use a topic, story or subject which has been used before, published, hashed or rehashed." References must not be made to politics, religious beliefs, or personal opinions, nor can anybody "talk shop." With so many subjects of conversation "verboten," members will have all the time in the world to devote themselves to a delightful savoring of delicious food and old wines.

Miami Beckons Capital's Society

If all this local out-flux to Miami Bech keeps going on, there won't be enough people left in Washington to start a dinner, tea or cocktail party. Word comes from the Southern resort that the colony of visitors from these parts is growing bigger and bigger every day in every way.

The Secretary of War, Harry H. Woodring, is fast becoming a confirmed commuter between the Capital and Miami. Not so long ago he accompanied Mrs. Woodring and their children there to visit Mrs. Woodring's parents, former Senator and Mrs. Marcus A. Coolidge. He'll be back in town to stay until Saturday and then he'll be off for Florida again, to spend a couple more weeks in Miami.

Among those from the hometown who are adding zest to the southern landscape are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Phillips, jr. With them is their son, Roger Phillips, vacationing from his studies at Andover. Recently Mrs. Phillips was hostess to a group of her friends at the weekly dinner dance at the Surf Club.

Then Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor and her daughter, Miss Gloria Grosvenor, are now sojourning at their home at Coconut Grove. Mrs. Grosvenor went afield recently on a brief trip to Nassau, but has returned to Miami Beach, where she and her daughter will remain until some time early in April.

Pupils Held Approving Vocational Education

Assistant Schools Superintendent Tells Group From Voteless Women's League More Older Pupils Are Using Expanded Facilities.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

A more serious-minded group of young people is applying for vocational education now than ever before, Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools, said yesterday at a meeting of the Department of Government and Education of the D. C. League of Voteless Women Voters.

The committee from the department, which is studying the possibility of expansion in the program of vocational education in the District, met at his office in Franklin School.

Passage of legislation in 1936, raising the vocational work to the junior high school level, has brought a decrease in enrollment, but an older and better type of students, Dr. Holmes told the women. There is now beginning to be an increase in the enrollment, he added, and a steadily growing number of high school students and graduates are seeking training in one or another of the trades.

The George-Deen law, which was also passed in 1936, providing for appropriation of funds for expansion and development of vocational education in the District, has made possible additional courses, he said. The night school at Abbot Vocational School for boys now includes courses in oxyaceeylene welding, arc welding, printing, sheet metal work, ignition and motors, he stated. The night school at McKinley offers courses in electrical work, woodwork, machine shop and mechanical drawing. Night classes are attended by adults and day classes by students between 13 and 21.

Since February day classes have opened half an hour earlier and continued a full six and a half hours, approximating trade conditions, with a noticeable boosting of morale of the young students, added Dr. Holmes.

Placement Service Has Good Reports

There is a placement service in each of the trade schools and records show success in placing graduates and satisfactory reports on their work, he told league members.

One of the night school courses recently started with a large enrollment is that in proper firing of boilers. There are now 97 stationary engineers enrolled, including many public school employes, said Dr. Holmes. He hopes next year to start a course for apartment house janitors, including in it handling of trash, electricity, water and details of management.

Mrs. Marjorie J. Schauffler, vice chairman of the department of government and education, of which Mrs. William H. Savin is head, was in charge of the meeting with Dr. Holmes yesterday. The department has already made a study of expenditures for schools in the District of Columbia over a period of ten years, in comparison to those in other cities of similar size.

It is now pursuing its investigation of school needs and directing special interest to vocational education as one solution to the problem of unemployment.

Wide Variety of Subjects Offered

Dr. Holmes outlined for league members the trade courses offered boys in the Abbott Vocational School: Auto mechanics, mechanical and architectural drawing, electrical work, including house wiring, repair and maintenance of household appliances; motor and generator repair, battery rebuilding and charging and auto ignition; painting, plumbing, printing, sheet metal work, woodwork and new courses in commercial drawing and the food trades, designed to equip the students for hotel, cafeteria and restaurant work.

The Jennison Vocational School for Girls, he said, will be housed in a few months in the new building at Allison street and Arkansas avenue. Homemaking and junior nursing courses are offered, as well as cafeteria and tea room training, cosmetology, dressmaking and junior busines training. The Lenox Vocational School, which is coeducational, offers some of the same courses for boys and girls.

Representatives of the department of government and education of the league appeared before both the House and Senate appropriation committees to speak on the matter of school appropriations for the District, and has been active in opposing the change which would put appointment of custodians of school buildings in the hands of the Commissioners, which the league considers an encroachment on the power of the Board of Education.

Hilda Conkling Addresses Club

Chevy Chase Jr. Woman's Group Hears Her Tell of Childhood Poems.

Hilda Conkling, the child poet, and Hilda Conkling the young woman of today, are two different persons, the latter told members of the Junior Woman's Club of Chevy Chase last night. Miss Conkling, who is now a resident of Georgetown, spoke at a meeting held under chairmanship of Miss Faye Espenschied, of the literature section, with Miss Katherine Ireland as hostess.

She told how she used to talk in poetry to her mother at the age of 4. Her mother, whom she was accustomed to seeing with a notebook in her hand, took down what she said, usually when she was tucked into her bed at night. When she was still too young to remember, her first book "Poems By a Little Girl," compiled by her mother from these notes, was published by Stokes & Co. Later, when she was about 9, the second book was published under the title "Shoes of the Wind." There was a storm of controversy when the volumes first came out, over whether the poems were her own or her mother's, but there was no question in the mind of her audience last night as to her childhood authorship.

Her third book was "Silverhorn," illustrated by Dorothy P. Lothrop, and she has a fourth now in manuscript. In addition to preparing this, she has recently had a number of poems published in women's magazines of national circulation and is contemplating opening a class in creative waiting for young children.

She read last night from "Silverhorn" as well as several recent poems.

The meeting was attended by practically the entire membership of the juniors.

Group to Mark Md. Founding

Marylanders will celebrate Maryland Day, March 25, the date in 1634 when colonists under Leonard Calvert first landed on St. Clements Island in the Potomac River. Two days later these colonists sailed back down the Potomac to the mouth of the Saint Marys River, and up the latter about 6 miles. There they established the first settlement in Maryland at Saint Marys City.

The location of this settlement on the banks of the St. Marys River, was purchased from Tayak, "Emperor" of the Piscataway and Yaocomico tribes of Indians, by Gov. Calvert for a few trinkets and garden tools. The charter granting the Province of Maryland, which is said to have been written by George Calvert, first baron of Baltimore, was to have been granted to the first baron for services rendered by him to James I, King of England, and to his son, Charles I, but unfortunately he died April 15, 1632. The grant was made to Cecil Calvert, second baron of Baltimore.

The Maryland Society of Washington will celebrate "Maryland Day" with a reception and dance at the Kennedy-Warren, March 25. The president of the society, Col. George H. Calvert, jr., a well-known Washington and Maryland attorney, is a descendant of the Calverts who founded Maryland.

The program will include numbers by the University of Maryland Mixed Glee Club and a dance by Miss Betty Raymond, a student at the university. Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the institution, will speak. Gov. Nice of Maryland, United States Senators Tydings and Radcliffe, and Representatives Cole, Gambrill, Goldsborough, Kennedy, Lewis and Palmisano and their wives have been asked to be guests of the society.

D. A. R. Chapter To Give Flag to Girl Scout Ship

Colorful Ceremony Is Slated at National City Church Friday Afternoon.

Major L'Enfant Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will present an American flag to the Girl Scout Mariner ship, Constellation, in a colorful ceremony at the National City Christian Church on Friday at 4:30.

The flag, which is being given through the courtesy of Miss Margaret Fraser in honor of her mother, will be presented by Mrs. Edward G. Wright, regent of the chapter. It will be used on official occasions accompanied by the regulation banner of the Girl Sea Scouts, a 'swallow-tail" pennant with the wheel and "trefoil" emblem in white on a blue field.

The Girl Scout Mariner ship, Vandalia will receive a flag from the Col. John Washington Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution on March 25.

Each of the "ships" is manned by 16 Girl Sea Scouts from 14 to 18 years of age. In sea-going uniforms of mariner's blue, with slacks and sweaters for shipboard, the girls are trained in navigation, safety rules, channel regulations and all observances of sail and power boating. A two weeks' cruise each summer gives them practical training in handling boats and charting their course. A series of tests establishes the rating of the girl mariners; starting with the tenderfoot or "midshipmite" test, they go on to the jack tar and seaman's test with the old salt's test establishing them in the highest rank. Mrs. Rebecca Spitler, skipper of the Constellation, received her training at the Sea Scout training centers and through the Potomac Power Boat Association, which gives a course in piloting small craft. Mrs. Helen Deason, first mate, and Miss Alice Kerr, second mate, assist Skipper Spitler in training the crew of the Constellation.

In addition to the flags being presented to the Girl Sea Scouts, five Girl Scout troops also will receive flags from the Daughters of the American Revolution this month. Army and Navy Chapter, through the courtesy of Madame Cantacuzene, presented a flag to the Girl Scouts of the Chevy Chase All Saints' Episcopal Church on Monday and also will give a flag to Troop 119 at the Chevy Chase Baptist Church on March 17 at 4 o'clock. Eleanor Wilson Chapter will present its flag to Troop No. 1 on Friday at the Foundry Methodist Church, and Our Flag Chapter will hold a flag ceremony at the Leland Junior High School on March 16 at 3:45 p. m. for Troop 55. On March 18 at 7:30 p. m. the Girl Scouts of Trinity Methodist Church will receive their flag from the Descendants of '76 Chapter.

Pilot Leaders Urge Suitland As Airport Site

Behncke Asks Mile-Square Field; Musick Likes Its Elevation.

Full support of the proposal to construct an airport at Suitland, Md., was voiced yesterday by David L. Behncke, president of the Airline Pilots Association and Harry Musick, professional pilot associated with Pennsylvania-Central Airlines, at hearings before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee.

Behncke emphasized, however, that the terminal, to meet present day needs and to prevent the building of obstructions in close proximity to the landing field, would have to be a mile square and be surrounded by at least a half of mile of protected area.

Musick drew attention to the high level of the terrain at Suitland. He asserted that the height of the proposed site would prevent the frequent recurrence of fog which often makes Washington Airport and Bolling Field unsafe for operations.

Opposition to the proposal was expressed by Commander W. K. Ruble of the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics.

He declared that the Navy Department was opposed to the construction of an airport at Suitland because noise from the ignition of planes landing and taking off at the proposed terminal, as well as "harmonic radiations" from the airliners, would interfere with reception at the Navy's new Cheltenham radio receiving station on which nearly a $1,000,000 has already been expended.

Representative Wood (Democrat), Missouri, who introduced the bill providing $3,000,000 for construction of the airport testified that "the Government owes it to the traveling public that all possible safeguards be accorded" commercial airline passengers.

He also urged development of the terminal on the ground that it would be available in case of war as an additional air field from which the defense of the National Capital against air attack could be assured.

Poisoner Strikes 4th D. C. Dog In Month, $100 Reward Posted

MASON WALTON AND BOOTS.

Just Monday, Boots, Boston bull terrier and ex officio member of the Walton family for two years and playmate of 9-year-old Mason Walton, romped and played with extra vim. It was the eleventh wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence P. Walton.

Yesterday, Boots was in a veterinarian's hospital. He had been taken to Dr. Weedon's office Monday night when the Waltons found him unconscious in the hall, his body rigid with a heavy dose of poison.

The Waltons, 1601 Argonne place northwest, had celebrated their anniversary by having dinner downtown, they said, and upon returning, found Boots at the front door in a coma.

Boots is the fourth dog poisoned in a month. In the past three years, more than 100 dogs have been poisoned, according to dog lovers.

Dr. Weedon treated a dog belonging to Mrs. D. A. Kells, 2700 Ontario road northwest, for poisoning Sunday. He said Boots is recovering.

"I can't imagine any person who could be so mean and heartless to an animal," Mrs. Walton declared yesterday.

Mrs. H. W. Elmore, of the Washington Humane Society, told The Post that the $100 reward offered by the organization in an epidemic of poisoning several years ago still is in effect.

"The society is extremely anxious to apprehend this fiend," Mrs. Elmore said, "and stands ready to turn over the reward to any person offering information which will lead to his apprehension."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Kurt Hetzel conducts the Washington Civic Orchestra, with Elizabeth Vandenberg as piano soloist, in Central High School auditorium Tuesday night. Program: Overture to "Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor" (Nicolai), Andante from Symphony No. 5 (Beethoven), Allegro con brio from Piano Concerto in C minor (Beethoven), "London Suite" (Eric Coates), Slavonic Dance in G minor (Dvorak), "L'Arlesienne Suite" No. 1 (Bizet).

It was none other than Adolphe Adam who remarked that concerts by amateurs could be fairly described by saying that the music which they make seems to have been composed for the happiness of those who perform it and for the despair of those who listen. But since the enjoyment of making music is the prime reason for the existence of amateur organizations, it behooves the auditors of their concerts to be more sympathetic than critical, and as long as the performers hold no claim to perfection, the standards of judgment should be accordingly adjusted.

The standard previously applied to the Washington Civic Orchestra before its reorganization by Kurt Hetzel had to be raised considerably last evening when the rejuvenated group gave its first concert in Central High School auditorium. Not only has Dr. Hetzel's zealous encouragement nearly doubled the personnel, but his musicianship also has had a stimulating effect upon the quality of playing. One was both surprised and pleased to note the progress which has been made in only a few months.

A congratulatory attitude was evident in the cordial reception extended by the audience, and there was an almost festive gusto in the applause. The occasion was further distinguished by the participation as soloist of Elizabeth Vandenberg, whose artistry is quite other than amateur in the novitiate sense of the word. Her reading of the first movement of Beethoven's C minor piano concerto was technically skillful, interpretatively intelligent, and emotionally poetic.

Dr. Hetzel had arranged a program well adapted to the executive ability of the orchestra. It opened with the cheerful overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" by Otto Nicolai, the gifted Koenigsbergian, who died in his thirty-ninth year, just when he had begun to apply his Italian training to the enrichment of German opera. This was followed by the andante from Beethoven's fifth symphony with its lovely and engrossing variations and by the concerto movement.

In celebration of the orchestra's initial concert, there was the first performance in Washington of the "London Suite" by Eric Coates, who is by way of being a specialist in suites, so many of them has he written. Without pretention of profundity, this English composer entertains with a light touch and deft instrumentation. This suite is topical in that it describes three districts in the British capital: Covent Garden, Westminster and Knightsbridge; and in it are found high spirits and catchy tunes.

Dvorak was represented by the G minor Slavonic Dance with its authentic racial flavor, and the program closed with four selections—Prelude, Adagietto, Minuetto and Farandole—from the incidental music by Bizet for Daudet's "L'Arlesienne."

VALETS TO OUR HEROES.

Washington, March 16.

It was the unguarded gossip of a servant that revealed to the amused Capital that a certain Cabinet official and his wife, in a past regime, always practiced their entrances and exits and rehearsed their table conversation before going to any important function.

* * * *

A few of the great ones in Washington are heroes to their valets and butlers . . . Quite a few are not . . . No large city has more servants per capita than this Capital, and these servants are the star witnesses to the slightly veiled fact that officialdom is largely composed of mere mortals.

Alice Barry . . . rare deb

* * * *

Everyone knows this, of course, if reminded occasionally . . . What servants thought—and said—about the Hardings, Coolidges and Hoovers has already swayed the verdict of history not a little, as it gradually filters out, first locally and then nationally. I assume the present Administration will be no exception.

"—no ' ro to his valet"

A shrewd servant can deduce with some accuracy, from his master's appetite, how his pet ideas are registering at the White House, or what the President's attitude was in their last conversation.

* * * *

Or if not from his ironclad appetite, which may be immune to affairs of state, then from his dispositions:

"The master scarcely touched his French fried onions tonight," the butler may say; or: "The old so-and-so behaved like a snapping turtle all evening."

* * * *

And that means things aren't so good; maybe the left-wingers are on top again for a few days . . . I sometimes feel that the quickest way to get the lowdown would be to hire out as a footman in a strategic household . . . But I'd probably spill the soup down the wrong side of the guest's neck, like a country bumpkin.

* * * *

There's one grizzled, poker-faced functionary who announces the names of the guests at the drawing room door at many Washington functions. He's called in as a specialist, because he knows by sight almost everyone who is anyone (even the more eminent gate crashers).

To have him look blankly at you or stumble over your name is almost as humiliating as to arrive without your necktie, as an absent-minded statesman once did.

"—sardonic pleasure for James"

The Capital's hectic social season is more of a strain on the chauffeurs than on other members of the big household staffs . . . A bigshot pair to out about ten times as often as they entertain. The cook gets a rest; the chauffeur doesn't.

* * * *

They gather in knots as they wait near their cars outside the big mansions, embassies, legations, the White House, where the parties are going on, exchanging notes.

"She's trying to make five at homes this afternoon," says one, "and two parties tonight."

* * * *

"That's nothing," says another, "mine are out tonight, out Tuesday, out Wednesday, out Thursday. They never stay home."

"Yeah," concludes the first one, "they act like martyrs, but they love it."

So far the CIO hasn't stepped into this lush theater of social warfare.

* * * *

Many of the big functions are stiffish. The guests don't know each other very well, they are on guard, they are trying to put their best forward for good old Graustark or the Bureau of Split Infinitives. They are mostly elderly, they get sleepy after two glasses of wine . . . The rare presence of a pretty deb (like Alice Barry) at a stodgy function, or even a brilliant one, peps things up. The pulse of the statesmen quickens . . . But the servants are in the best spot for a certain sardonic pleasure.

MacCalman Rites Scheduled Today

Funeral services for Dr. Duncan MacCalman, formerly with the Veterans' Administration here, will be held in Baltimore at 2:30 p. m. today with burial in Lorraine Cemetery. The Scottish Rite and Concordia Lodge of Masons will conduct the services.

Dr. MacCalman died Monday at Maryland General Hospital after an illness of three months. Born in Morven, Scotland, he was 73 years old and served as a major in the Medical Department of the Army during the World War, establishing hospitals in Europe.

He was a graduate of the Baltimore Medical College and was connected with the Maryland General Hospital from 1895 to 1901, serving as its superintendent from 1898 to 1900. At one time he was an officer of the Veterans' Administration in New Orleans and was moved to the offices here in 1932. He retired in 1935.

War Abroad Is 'Not Ours,' Fish Asserts

Representative Indorses Adequate Navy Before Legion.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), New York, last night warned a meeting of District veterans gathered to celebrate the nineteenth anniversary of the American Legion, that if Old World nations choose to go to war "it's their war and not ours."

He spoke at Hitchcock Hall, St. Elizabeths Hospital, when local legionnaires met as guests of Kenna-Main Post to observe the birthday anniversary in common with more that 11,000 other posts throughout the Nation.

Mrs. Rogers Speaks.

"We're prepared to spend millions for defense but not one dollar to send an American soldier or an American ship to fight other people's wars," Fish declared later pointing out that he believed in an adequate Navy and adequate defense program.

Other speakers on the local program were Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (Republican), Massachusetts; Thomas Mason, jr., commander of the District American Legion Department; Mrs. Dorothy Harper, president of the District Women's Auxiliary, and Fred Mason, chef de chemin de fer of the 40 and 8.

At the conclusion of the program at Hitchcock Hall, members listened to a radio address from Chicago by Daniel J. Doherty, national commander of the legion.

Doherty declared that the war-born legion "advocates a practical pacifism" and believes that "national safety dictates that America evidence its strength as well as its justice."

Roosevelt Letter Read.

Doherty read the following message from President Roosevelt:

"The nineteenth birthday of the American Legion emphasizes the fact that this significant organization has reached a mature age. It has survived all the changes and vicissitudes since the close of the war because its purposes are constructive. The organization has acquired an experience and discipline which fit it admirably for service in these present rather difficult times.

"The legion members know the value of national defense as an instrument of peace. The organization's child welfare program alone would bear eloquent witness to its generous heart. All of these good works carried on by the legion and its close ally, the American Legion Auxiliary, merit the highest praise and it gives me great pleasure in extending birthday greetings to assure you of the Nation's gratitude and appreciation."

Fellow Policemen To Pay Legal Fees For Keys' Slayer

The District Policemen's Association unanimously voted last night to pay all legal expenses incurred by Private John W. Nally in connection with the slaying of Leroy Keys, demented 38-year-old colored World War veteran, March 8 and also voted Nally its full moral support.

Composed of all members of the Metropolitan, White House and Park Police, the association met at Odd Fellows Hall. Lieut. Frank Varney is presient.

Investigation of the slaying of Key will be concluded by the District grand jury today. Robert Robb, assistant United States attorney in charge of the case, said last night. Keys was slain when policemen sought to seize him when he was runnning amuck in his home at 2470 Ontario road last week.

A coroner's jury twice has failed to agree on a verdict concerning Policeman John Nally, whose shots killed Keys.

Robb said he had 40 witnesses to send before the grand jury

First 100 Youngsters Enjoy New Southeast Boys Club

The modern pool with a 25-yard straightaway for races promises to be a favorite haunt of members of the Southeast Boys Club which opened yesterday.

The days of "real sport" and healthful recreation and learning began yesterday for 100 youngsters who are members of the new Southeast Boys' Club.

These recruits were the vanguard of a membership which will exceed 1,200 as soon as the complete routine of the training and recreational facilities of the club are thoroughly worked out. After 10 days another 100 boys will be admitted to membership, and the process will be continued until all the boys who have formally applied for membership are enjoying the facilities of the new clubhouse, rated with the best in the world.

Physical examinations were given 25 of the boys yesterday, and the others will be examined today and tomorrow. Examining physician was Dr. Homer Butler, and he was assisted by the staff nurse, Miss Evelyn Choate.

For the first time yesterday the selected group swam in the new pool, a modern competitive natatorium, with a 25-yard straightaway.

So eager were the youngsters of Southeast to get inside their club that a crowd of them gathered outside as the group of 100—selected in order of application for membership—entered. They were allowed to come inside with the "lucky" ones and inspect the headquarters of Good Fellowship, Limited.

The special group included 25 boys from the four divisions of the club, midgets, juniors, intermediates and seniors.

Among spots visited yesterday were the handicraft shops, the printing shop, the woodworking shop and the art shop. In the gaming room, furnished with work the boys have done in other centers, there was a bustle and stir as new equipment was inspected.

"The days of real sport are here," the boys yelled to each other, as they dove into the crystal pool and flicked basketballs over the floor of the new gymnasium, where many a future champion will get his start.

Charles M. Fyfe is managing director. His staff includes Charles Reynolds, director of athletics; Stanley Jenkins, vocational director; Max Rote, swimming director; Arthur Fyfe, recreational and social director; Miss Choate, Miss Helen Patterson, secretary, and Mrs. F. Patterson, in charge of membership.

The Rotary Club will hold a luncheon in the recreation hall of the new home today at 12:30 p. m. The members will inspect the quarters and adopt resolutions commending Mrs. Eleanor Patterson and Frank R. Jelleff, who jointly gave the funds for the new $200,000 structure.

Laundries Ask $11.35 Weekly Pay for Women

Workers Counter, Setting Acceptable Minimum at $20.08.

Estimated budgets based on weekly minimum wages of $11.35 to $20.08 for women workers in the laundry and dry cleaning industry were submittted yesterday to the wage conference.

Employer representatives held that $11.35 a week for 4,500 women in the industry would be "adequate to supply the necessary cost of living to the women workers," and "to maintain them in health and to protect their morals."

The employe group believes it will cost much more. It proposed a $20.08 minimum.

Yesterday's meeting, the first public hearing held for the industry, was brief, lasting scarcely more than an hour, and was taken up mostly by a statement of the minimum wage law by the board's chairman, Mrs. William Kittle; presentation of the proposed budgets by Arthur L. Schoenthal, employe representative on the board and Claude H. Woodward, employer representative, and statements of the aims of employers and employes with respect to future meetings.

The largest single item on the employer's budget was room and board, estimated at $7.50 a week. The employe budget asked $5 a week for a room and $8 a week for meals. Friday's meeting will center on discussion of consolidating room and board as a single item.

Point Is, How Many Hose.

Both employer and employe groups agreed on the transportation item. A weekly car pass of $1.25 covered the matter. They agreed also on a yearly cost of $15 for vacation.

Clothing requires 82 cents per week, according to the employers and $2.49, according to the employes. Sundries, including upkeep of clothing, personal care, medicine, recreation, vacation, organizations, would cost $4.59 per week, by the employe budget, and $3.03 by the employer's budget.

Women workers in the industry require at least three hats a year at a total cost of $5.15 said the employe representatives. Two hats at a total yearly cost of $1.88 should suffice, said the employers. Twenty-four pair of hose at 69 cents each are needed for one year, according to the employes. Six silk pair at 39 cents and 12 pair of lisle hose at 20 cents, would suffice, according to the employers.

Housewives Blamed.

There is stiff competition for the District dry cleaning and laundry employer, Woodward argued. It includes housewives, nearby firms in Maryland and Virginia and certain firms in the District, such as railroads, which send their laundry to points as far away as North Carolina, where rates are lower, he pointed out.

Schoenthal, employe representative on the board, pointed to "the high standard of living and cost of clothing in the District."

Members of the wage conference and Minimum Wage Board were scheduled to meet this morning at 9:30 o'clock to tour several dry-cleaning establishments and laundries "to get a first-hand view of the industry."

The conference is headed by Clarence Phelps Dodge. Other public representatives are Mrs. Albert Atwood, former president of the Y. W. C. A., and Mrs. Hurst Hill. Employe representatives are Mrs. Sara Lyons, Mrs. Lena Hawkins and Mrs. Lilly Brooks; employer representatives are Sam Rubenstein, E. E. Farran and Michael Grad.

Mystery Man of Seat Pleasant Found Dead In His Fantastic 5-Storied Castle of Dreams

Seat Pleasant, Md., March 15.—Neighbors of 69-year-old George Harris went into his fantastic and spirelike castle of dreams here today and found the recluse dead.

The tall man who wore the bat-wing collars—a lawyer he was, who dreamed a dream of a wife's returning to the castle he had built and took 23 years in the building—was lying on a cot, covered with overcoats.

The neighbors began thinking on how long he had been in the community, and began piecing together a strange fabric of a life.

The oldest of them recalled that Harris had been there about 30 years. He talked a lot when he came; but though he was talkative it was still a little difficult to know him. It was hard, they said, to understand a man with such a dream.

And of the dream, they knew but little. It had taken form in the castle, now five stories high. Neighbors understood Harris had built it in anticipation of his wife's returning. She left him, they said, in the World War. In any event, Harris labored at the castle, but turning occasionally to drive some shrewd bargains.

Two of these enterprises resulted in stores in the Seat Pleasant community. These brought him an income, and at least one bank account. But the castle engaged him mostly. He had a way of leaving for awhile, and coming back with strange pieces of mosaic, to be placed in a wall or floor. And for a while, he dug at the front yard, finally completing a swimming pool, which was little more than a fountain.

He told all the children of the community to come to his castle and go swimming, but few of them did. Once he invited the American Legion post to come and swim. But they didn't come either.

One thing that puzzled the neighbors was the sign on the house, indicating that Harris was an attorney. He had said he was a graduate in law when he first came to Seat Pleasant, and in his conversation he sometimes used high-sounding legal phrases. Once he sprung these on the justice of the peace during some litigation about the plumbing in the castle. The plumber had complained that the walls were too thick for pipes to enter.

It was a curious fabric, they said. For once, a long time ago, Harris wanted his place to be a hotel and he decided to call it the "Royal George." Then he wanted to use it for a girls' school. He wanted to teach them the law.

Meanwhile the castle grew higher. One lady complained, because it obscured her view of the Virginia hills. It overlooked a coal yard, and the coal dealer wanted to buy it. But Harris wouldn't sell. He just sent it higher; he may have been planning another story when death broke the dream.

They didn't know how long he had been dead. A neighbor, Mrs. Rose Long, of 42 Marion street, missed seeing him for a couple of days, and entering the castle, she found him dead. Justice of the Peace Robert E. Ennis gave a verdict from natural causes.

Gandhi's Power Held Weakened

Because of his failure to live up to his promise to achieve independence for India, Mahatma Gandhi's influence has been weakened among the people who once worshiped him, the World Service (Missionary) Society was told last night at Luther Place Church by Miss Katharine Fahs, former Lutheran medical missionary to that country.

The speaker, who spent 33 years in India, was supervisor of the first Lutheran mission hospital in the jungles of Guntur, the "hot-spot" of the anti-British riots shortly after the close of the World War.

Questioned from the floor on the feasibility of England's granting India its independence, Miss Fahs said that "the day after India gets its independence, Japan will sail in by way of Calcutta and take possession." "Japan has had its eyes on India for years," she declared, "and is just waiting for the opportunity to strike."

According to Miss Fahs, the law passed about three years ago which prohibits child marriages is ineffective.

Citizen Group Asks Beer Tax, Opposes Racing

Columbia Heights Forum Urges Park Road Bus Rate.

A tax on beer was approved and legalized horse racing in the District was opposed in resolutions adopted last night by the Citizens' Forum of Columbia Heights, meeting at Powell Junior High School.

The organization urged a cross-town bus line from Wisconsin avenue east to New Hampshire avenue along Park road northwest. A resolution was adopted urging that control of playgrounds remain within the Board of Education.

Delegates appointed to the conference on District suffrage Friday were Mrs. Florence Laughlin, Burd W. Payne and Mrs. Clarence Fernald.

A lump sum appropriation for public schools was opposed by the Petworth Citizens Association, on the ground that this method of funding the schools would incur additional administrative expenses and would increase the duties of the Board of Education.

A resolution was adopted favoring co-ordination of recreational activities with several amendments to the present bill suggested. These would increase citizen representation on the controlling board from one to five and would guarantee against enroachment of school property or interference with school recreational programs.

A bill fixing heavy penalties for kidnaping in the District was approved while another providing the death penalty for armed robbery was opposed.

Dr. George F. Bowerman, public librarian, spoke on "The Petworth Library."

Trade Board Asks 4 New D. C. Judges

One Sought for Court of Appeals and 3 for District Bench.

Recommendation by its committee on law and legislation that an additional justice for the District Court of Appeals and three additional justices for the District courts be added to the judiciary was approved last night by the Washington Board of Trade as it observed judiciary night at the Mayflower Hotel.

Other recommendations of the committee, which met with the approval of members included a new Federal courthouse; a sanitay commission and civil service examinations for employes in all branches of the municipal government.

New Courthouse Asked.

With justices and judges of all Washington courts as guests of honor at the dinner, meeting and supper, the members heard addresses by the Rev. J. Herbert Garner, pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian Church; Justice Miller, of the Court of Appeals; Justice James M. Proctor, of the District Court, and Representative Sumners, of Texas, and chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

The recommendations regarding enlargement of the judiciary here and the construction of a new courthouse called attention to the fact that the present building was inadequate to accommodate the growing business thrust upon it, and that temporary offices for some courts and court officials in the new Police Court Building only temporarily relieved the situation, as the Police Court Building was primarily to house the lower courts.

Enlargement of the judiciary would speed cases and enable justice to move more swiftly, the recommendation held.

Dr. Garner urged an annual Federal compulsory psychiatric examination for every teacher and child in the United States as one of the first steps in stamping out future crime.

"In the United States there is at least one teacher incapable of instructing the young," he said.

Numbers Game Scored.

"Children should be so taught that there is a desire for moral culture. That is Christianity's plan to eliminate crime."

Dr. Garner decried many of the present ways of dealing with crime and advocated a Board of Criminal Restitution, under the Department of Justice.

The crime situation in the District was attacked by Odell Smith, chairman of the public order committee of the Board of Trade.

"Washington has been called a cesspool of crime," said he. "The fault lies with all of us—Congress, judges, officials and the Board of Trade.

"The numbers game, for instance, is not only prevalent but it is almost fashionable."

He praised the work of the Police Boys clubs here and urged the passage of a Congressional bill against the "numbers racket." He also urged a better vagrancy law, ample bonds, the speeding up of cases in the courts and careful probation.

In his address, Justice Proctor urged Washingtonians to aid officials in every way.

"Let's have more constructive and less destructive criticism," he said.

18 WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16, 1938 X*

This Morning

Cambria Is Griffith's Ace Talent Scout.

By Shirley Povich.

Orlando, Fla.

That old trafficker in baseball flesh, the little round man known as Joe Cambria, watched young George Case skim across a good 50 yards of outfield terrain to haul down a fly ball and then muttered:

POVICH.

"I think he'll do it."

By that, Joe Cambria meant he was thinking that the youth would make good in the big leagues this season.

And the thought was undoubtedly sired by the wish. Because if young Chase breaks into the Washington outfield, the pockets of Cambria will be lined by a nice bit of coin now belonging to Clark Griffith.

That's the way Cambria works. He presents for Clark Griffith's approval the refined products of his minor league baseball factories, and, if they meet the test of the big leagues, he is paid off handsomely. If they don't he does not stand to lose because he has made no original investment.

Joe Cambria, in case you hadn't heard, is the proprietor of the Trenton club of the Eastern League, the Greenville, S. C., club of the Sally League, the Salisbury club of the Eastern Shore League and the St. Augustine team of the Florida State League. He grabs his players off the sandlots, scads of 'em, schools them, distributes uniforms and specializes in home-grown ball clubs.

• • • •

It's a strange relationship—Cambria's and Griffith's. It is because of Cambria that the Nats are able to operate without a single talent scout, while such as the New York Yankees feel they need ten scouts and the Detroit Tigers operate with a staff of seven. No written pact exists between Cambria and Griffith. There is simply an understanding that the Nats' owner has first call on any ball player on Cambria's teams—at his own price.

Thus Griffith is relieved of any gamble in the case of young Case, whose talents were such that the Yankees, the Pirates and the Reds made outright offers to Cambria for the lad who starred at Trenton last season. Ten thousand dollars, at least, Case would have brought in the market, but Griffith took over his contract for $1,000.

• • • •

If Case is a failure he will be returned to Cambria. But if Case makes good in the majors, Griffith will gladly pay a fine price for him. And if you're asking why Cambria chooses to do business in this manner rather than reap a ready profit from other clubs, it's this way:

Griffith is Cambria's "angel"—has been for ten years. Cambria is willing to exchange ball players for Griffith's counsel and advice in baseball matters. The little Italian leans heavily on the Nats' owner in all his baseball enterprises. Such things as filing contracts with the Commissioner's office, releasing ball players on option and manipulating waiver lists Cambria does not quite understand fully. In every dilemma Cambria calls on Griffith.

Time without number, the little round man has brought down the wrath of Commissioner Landis for irregularities in the conduct of his baseball business—innocent wrongdoings, but serious in the eyes of the baseball czar. On these occasions, Griffith has gone to bat for Cambria and relieved him of heavy fines as a repeated offender.

• • • •

But the Nats' owner otherwise has a great regard for the fat little Italian's ability both as a baseball business man and talent scout. At a time when Griffith was losing money on his $200,000 investment in Chattanooga, a class A club, Cambria was able to buy the Albany franchise in the class AA International League for $7,500. Four years later, Cambria sold out to the New York Giants for $32,000, while Griffith took a $50,000 loss on his Chattanooga property.

He used to be a ball player himself, Cambria did. Played the outfield in the Canadian-American League and was a regular outfielder for Hartford in the old Eastern League before he broke his leg sliding into a base in 1916. That put an end to his ball playing, so he parlayed an idea into a profitable laundry business in Baltimore. But baseball was in his blood, so ten years ago he bought the Hagerstown Club of the Blue Ridge League. Four years later he was able to buy Albany and today, as we were saying, he is the proprietor of four minor league clubs.

Directly and indirectly, Cambria is responsible for the presence of six ball players on the

Amateur-Pro Play To Begin Today

St. Augustine, Fla., March 15 (AP).—Gold-seeking golfers and their amateur teammates start play tomorrow in the fourth annual amateur-professional best ball match play tournament.

The qualifying test is over the 36-hole route. Last year's winners, Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., and Frank Ford, of Charleston, S. C., are exempt from qualifying, as are several other favored combinations.

The professional member of the winning team will receive $1,000, but he will have to work for it. The qualifying round will be followed by an 18-hole round Thursday, two 18-hole rounds Friday, a 36-hole semifinal Saturday and the 36-hole finals Sunday.

Ranked as one of the strongest combinations is the team composed of Ralph Guldahl, National Open champion, and Robert Sweeny, Jr., British Amateur titleholder.

John Revolta And Picard Bow in Upset

Goggin and Hogan Beat 4-Ball Champions at Miami.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., March 15.—The unheralded team of Willie Goggin and Ben Hogan touched off an 11 under par blast of golf today and ended the three-year reign of Johnny Revolta and Henry Picard in the $4,000 international four-ball tournament.

Goggin and Hogan, making their debut in the 15-year-old tournament, disposed of Revolta and Picard in convincing 4 and 3 style and marched into the finals against Dick Metz and Ky Laffoon.

Metz and Laffoon, playing spotty golf, trounced Byron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, 3 and 2, in the lower bracket semifinal.

Hogan, slender young Texan, who recently became playing professional at a White Plains, N. Y., club, and Goggin served out an 8 under par 64 for a six-hole lead in the morning and never gave Revolta and Picard a chance thereafter.

Coast to Victory.

The three-time winners loosed a 31, 5 below regulation, on the afternoon outgoing nine and won back just one hole, the twenty-sixth, where Revolta dropped a 15-foot putt for a birdie. Revolta also took the twenty-ninth when Goggin and Hogan slipped over par for the only time today, but the dark horse combination remained steady and coasted to victory.

Picard and Revolta won only one hole in the morning as Goggin and Hogan time and again drilled their approach and chip shots within easy putting distance.

With the pressure on them constantly after the first few holes, Revolta and Picard scrambled vainly to overtake their opponents. Once during the morning, both Johnny and Henry removed their shoes and socks and waded into a water hazard to play their shots. They lost the hole to Hogan's par.

Hot and Cold.

Metz and Laffoon turned alternately hot and cold as they disposed of Nelson and McSpaden. Metz chipped in from 30 feet for an eagle on the opening hole and Laffoon dropped an 8-foot putt for an eagle on the seventh but they bogeyed 3 of the first 9 holes and rounded the turn, only one up.

Nelson and McSpaden pulled up even on the second nine, with a best-ball 66 to 67 for Metz and Laffoon. The latter team, however, pulled three up at the twenty-seventh and won a nip-and-tuck scrap down the last 9, with Laffoon's putter blazing three consecutive birdies.

Valdez Aspires to a Higher Rating as Wrestling Villain

Mexican, Champion Meets Dr. John Murphy at Arena in Co-feature Tomorrow Night.

No ordinary wrestler is Bronko Valdez, the massive Mexican who meets Dr. John Murphy tomorrow night at Turner's Arena, for he boasts a colorful past and bright future in the mat game. Valdez isn't on the St. Patrick's Day program by chance, for the management needed a blood-thirsty villain to pit against the popular Irishman and Bronko filled every particular of the bill.

At this writing Valdez ranks third on wrestling's bad actor list, locally, coming after Chief Chewaki and Dean Detton, but he's trying hard, and has a few new fouls to try on Murphy.

Valdez was born in Mexico City 25 years ago and claims to be a nephew of the late bandit, Pancho Villa, a picturesque character until he met up with the law. Destiny, however, adjusted this dubious honor by making him a nephew of Aurelio Mungia, attorney general for the state of Michoacan. That, of course, had nothing to do with Valdez's career as a wrestler.

The squatty, 200-pound athlete's first and biggest ambition was to be a bull fighter, and he was serious enough to serve in the bull pens at odd jobs during a year's apprenticeship. But wrestling came into popular favor in the country and he foresaw a better future, financially, throwing athletes rather than bulls. Anyway, his bull fighting was nothing to boast about, and his bulky figure was not exactly what the fair senoritas expected to see in a matador's colorful uniform.

Valdez wrestled in Oaxaca, Puebla, Guadalajara, Esmeralda and finally in Mexico City, where a progressive tournament, similar to golden gloves boxing tournaments, was held. He won the championship. With that title and his figure and villainous complex he's been going great in this country.

But Dr. Murphy may put an end to his capers, it being St. Patrick's night and a big day for the Irish.

Detton, incidentally, and Chief Chewaki clash in the other half of the co-feature.

Griff May Buy Chervinko; Visits Camp of Dodgers

By the Associated Press.

Orlando, Fla., March 15.—Clark Griffith betook himself to Clearwater, Fla., winter home of the Brooklyn Dodgers, today and reports here are that he is on the trail of a catching acquisition.

The object of Griffith's affections is believed to be Paul Chervinko, chunky backstop who formerly had a tryout with the St. Louis Cardinals. Chervinko, a star with Columbus in 1936, was traded to Brooklyn by the St. Louis club last summer.

He impressed the Washington bosses with his back-stopping and hitting in the series with the Cardinals last spring. Griffith is believed willing to pay the Cardinals something more than the waiver price of $7,500 for Chervinko's release. The catcher is 24 years old and a stocky 180-pounder.

Blair Academy and Rutgers Prep of New Jersey, Massanutten Military Academy, of Woodstock, Va., and Franklin and Marshall, Valley Forge and Germantown academies, of Pennsylvania, are leading entries in the preparatory school competition.

Sabin and McNeill Are Easy Winners

Hamilton, Bermuda, March 15 (AP).—Wayne Sabin, of Hollywood, Calif., and Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, first and second seeded players in the men's singles division of the Bermuda tennis championships, won straight set victories over Bermudian opponents in the quarter-finals today.

Sabin put out William Freisenbruch, 8—6, 6—2, and McNeill conquered Brownlow Eve, 8—6, 8—6.

John Van Ryn, Austin, Tex., and Robert Murray, of Montreal, also reached the semifinals. Van Ryn defeated J. Gilbert Hall, South Orange, N. J., veteran, 6—3, 6—2. Murray eliminated Bernard Coghlan, of Chicago, 6—3, 6—4.

F. B. I. Defeats Senate In Play-Off, 33 to 20

Tied at one game each, the teams will meet in the deciding contest Saturday, at Tech gym.

The result of the final game will cast light on what to expect of F. B. I. and Senate in The Post-A. A. U. basketball championships, in which both are entered.

Old-Time Stars Put Up Great Battle.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, March 15.—One-time great stars of the Oakland, Calif., Golden Staters, showing the toll of years, bowed to the rugged young Harmon Demons, of Chicago, 33 to 32, today in a second-round game of the National A. A. U. basketball tournament.

The Golden Staters, with a six-man squad dotted with four All-America stars of yesteryear, used their hands to go to the front the first half, and their heads to stay there the second half, only to lose the lead and the game in the last two seconds as Joe Frivaldsky whammed a long hope shot toward the hoop, and it swished through.

It was drama with a capital "D" from the start. Bill Wheatley, Johnny Callahan, Mel Miller and McBurney—names etched in the National A. A. U. Hall of Fame—played with their old-time artistry early in the first half to befuddle the spry Chicagoans and take a 20-to-6 lead.

Old legs began to quiver, however, and the Harmons started to pull up and trailed, 20 to 22, at the half.

In the second period the count was tied at 22-all, then 24, but the canny veterans, using every wile at their command to gain respite, never permitted the hard-driving youngsters from Chicago to get in front until Frivaldsky lofted the ball from a frenzied tangle to end the comeback dreams of the gallant warriors from California.

The game stole the spotlight of today's early play, which saw the Oklahoma City Parks and the Colorado Springs Antlers, both seeded quintets, advance under wraps. The Parks defeated the Detroit Jaglowicz of Detroit, 54 to 34, and the Antlers downed the General Electric five, of Schenectady, 53 to 25.

In other second-round games today the Portland Packards defeated the Middletown, Ohio, Armcos, 36 to 35; the South Bend Studebakers defeated the Padgitts, of Waco, Tex., 60 to 53; the Bogalusa, La., Gaylords downed the Salt Lake City Eckers, 37 to 44, and the Strom quintet, of Oakland, nosed out the Winston-Salem Uniques, 46 to 42.

In the final first-round match today the Tacoma Alt Heidelbergs defeated Adams (Colo.) Normal, 49 to 14.

Duke University Picks Two Grid Captains

Durham, N. C., March 15 (AP).—Eric Tipton, of Petersburg, Va., and Dan Hill., jr., of Asheville, N. C., were tonight elected co-captains of the Duke University football team for the coming fall.

It marks the first time since football was started at the institution back in 1888 that the team has had co-captains. Tipton, a halfback, and Hill, the center, succeed Woodrow Lipscomp, a guard, from Hinton, W. Va.

—New Nats, No. 3—

Leonard

'Dutch' Eyes 'Comeback' in Big Leagues.

WILL ANSWER to the name of "Dutch" exactly as has every other Leonard who has been in the big leagues . . . At 28, he's trying a "comeback" to the majors after a three-year tryout with the Brooklyn Dodgers which ended in 1936 . . . Is causing hope to flutter among the Nats' bosses with the possibilities of his knuckle ball . . . Mother is a Belgian, father is German . . . Hails originally from Auburn, Ill., and worked in the soft-coal mines after finishing high school . . . Played semi-pro ball until picked up by a Mobile scout in 1930 . . . Spent two years in the Southern and Three Eye leagues before Brooklyn bought him in 1933 . . . Wasn't having much success as a fast-ball pitcher, but was intrigued one night in the Dodgers' hotel by a conversation in which Brooklyn coaches praised Eddie Rommel, famed knuckle - ball artist of the Athletics . . . Recalled that he used to experiment with a knuckle ball in his sandlot days and determined to develop it if knuckle-ball pitching would help him . . . It didn't help him to stay with the Dodgers, who shipped him to Atlanta, but his knuckler was a sensation in the Southern League . . . Won eight and lost two last year before illness laid him low . . . Was picked up in the draft for $7,500 by the Nats last fall . . . Bucky Harris remembered him for his success against the Nats in exhibition games with Brooklyn in the spring . . . Does not throw the orthodox knuckler with the ball resting against the joints of his fingers . . . Digs his finger tips into the ball and throws with that grip . . . Batters vow that the knuckler wobbles crazily and then dips away from the plate . . . Harris envisions Leonard as an ace relief pitcher if not a regular starter . . . He's one of the biggest men in training camp—6 feet 1, and 205 pounds . . . He's married, girls!

Scalzo Beats Litfin.

New York, March 15 (U.P.).—Petey Scalzo, 125½, New York, scored an 8-round decision over Nat Litfin, 125¾, New York, in the main boxing match at the Coliseum tonight.

Louis Opens His Training

Bomber Launches Work for Thomas Bout.

Chicago, March 15.—Joe Louis looked as though he had been neglecting his fried chicken lately as he plunged into training today for his title defense against Harry Thomas at the Chicago Stadium April Fool's Day.

Apparently fortified with hold-over condition attained in preparing for his quick triumph over Nathan Mann in New York last month, the Brown Bomber devoted a minimum of time to ceremonies. He gave about 15 minutes to photographers and what he passes off for interviews, then got down to business.

Weighing about 209 pounds, Louis appeared trim and light-footed in two rounds of shadow boxing, two more of batting practice on Sparring Partner George Nicholson and another pair on the little bag. He exercised restraint against Nicholson, although he did get in a few stiff licks to the body.

The heavyweight champion showed up early enough to watch—with vast indifference—Thomas' drill. Joe stood within 5 feet of the ring in which Thomas mauled Bernie Bowman, a big, roundish Chicago heavyweight about, but seemed more interested in watching a couple of featherweights in an adjacent enclosure.

Thomas didn't stick around to watch Louis. In almost perfect condition after three weeks of outdoor on his farm home near Eagle Bend, Minn., the part-time railroader devoted a large share of his session to sharpening up his right hand—his only hope of achieving what would be as big an upset as a brewery wagon horse beating War Admiral.

Harvard Tankers Win League Title

New York, March 15 (AP).—For the second year in succession, Harvard is the undefeated champion of the Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming League but individual scoring honors were won by Paul Williams, junior free-style ace of Penn's cellar team.

Williams ended the season with 56¾ points to beat out the Harvard captain, Charles G. Hutter, jr., by 6½ points. Hutter won the scoring race last year with 61 5-12 points.

Back of Williams and Hutter came Hank Van Oss, of Princeton, with 48½ points; Arthur Ostrander, of Dartmouth, 44, and Bill Kendall, of Harvard, 43½.

Army Equestrians To Tour Midwest

The Army Equistrian Team, now training for the 1940 Olympics, will leave Fort Riley, Kans., about April 25, for an exhibition tour of five Middlewestern cities, the War Department announced yesterday.

On the joprney the 8 officers, 8 enlisted men and 18 horses will visit Detroit, Mich., Louisville, Ky., Indianapolis, Ind., Cleveland, Ohio, and St. Louis, Mo.

Outstanding among the horses to be exhibited is Dakota, which tied for the first place in the Prix des Nations event of the 1936 Olympics and was winner of the international individual championship at Aachen, Germany, last year.

P. M. C. Four Wins Student Jump Class

V. M. I. Team Is Second; Sandy and Tandem Also Winners.

By Gene Reed.

Hunter championship of the series of winter horse shows held at Fort Myer, Va., was awarded last night to Billy Do, top jumping horse owned and ridden by Capt. "Tony" Luebbermann. Capt. Luebbermann had amassed a total of 14 points. Billy Do is a fine, bold jumper with perfect manners and well deserves his laurels.

The jumping team from Pennsylvania Military College held its lead to win the student team championship with the reserve going to Virginia Military Institute. The four young horsemen from P. M. C. completed a difficult course with an aggregate of only 14 faults, 2 points better than V. M. I.

In the touch and out class, Sandy, a little brown gelding well known in local showings, took the blue with Capt. "Tony" Luebbermann up. None of the entries in this class managed to clear the complete course of jumps set up by Maj. A. W. Roffe.

Mrs. Pugh Wins.

Tandem, owned and ridden by Mrs. John Ramsay Pugh, took the open hunter event with a smooth performance over a course that included the fanciest sort of hunting field obstacles—worm fences, garden gates and so on. Second went to Harry Semmes, on his good hunter, Piedmont. Mr. Semmes is joint M. F. H. at the Riding and Hunt Club. Young Jimmy Marsh, riding F. C. Kleeman's horse, Colonel, took a bad fall over a stone wall and was unable to finish the course.

First play award in the handicap jumping class went to Lieut. John Ramsay Pugh, on Sir Conrad, and with this win he was declared jumper champion of the show with the reserve going to Capt. Luebbermann's all-around winner, Billy Do.

Table Tennis Event Is Set

Great interest is being shown in the junior table tennis tournament to be conducted by the Washington Table Tennis Courts on Saturday and Sunday, March 19 and 20, sanctioned by the District of Columbia Table Tennis Association. Boys and girls 16 years of age and under will have an opportunity to "show their stuff" and future stars of the city may rise from their ranks.

Singles and doubles events will be run off. First rounds will be played Saturday evening at 6:30, late rounds on Sunday afternoon at 2:30, and finals Sunday evening at 7:30.

Entry blanks may be obtained at the Washington Table Tennis Courts, 1305 E street northwest, and must be mailed or brought there not later than noon Saturday. The winners of each event will be awarded a trophy.

On March 26 and 27 the Washington courts will sponsor the second annual Government employes' tournament. Entry blanks are now available at the courts, and also in the current issue of the Table Tennis Tattler, Washington's own newspaper of the game, copies of which may be found at any of the table tennis courts around town.

Grey Simon Is Victor In New Orleans Race

New Orleans, March 15 (AP).—Mrs. E. Haughton's Grey Simon easily won the feature today for 3-year-olds and upward over five other claimers at one mile and a sixteenth at the Fair Grounds.

The 4-year-old gelding by Sir Greysteel started on top and with Jockey Vedder in the saddle held the pack safely throughout the distance. He covered the distance in 1:47 flat and paid his followers in the mutuels $12.20 for $2. C. T. Davison's Salaam followed the leader from the half way mark and just managed to save the place from the fast-closing Master Time who finished third.

Jackie Berg Wins.

Big Chief Marshall Can Quit His Tubs—Ticket Sale Booming

By Walter Haight.

I would have to barge into the Palace Laundry at a time when the knees of my trousers were bulging as if I were squatting to make a standing broad jump and I would be wearing a frayed shirt that escaped being a dust rag for the last three washings because it has pretty buttons.

I found George Preston Marshall draped over a wash tub vigorously rubbing a pair of white sox. When he saw me he straightened up, wiped his hands on his apron and said, "Walter, there was a time when I only had to wash on Monday's, but business has picked up lately and here it is almost Tuesday night and I'm still going strong."

I could have added that customers might help by not wearing so many white socks, but George went on, placing his hands on the back of his hips, "Sort of gets you right here."

It was at this point that Jack Espey, general manager of the Redskins, came into view. After he relieved himself of a mouthful of clothes pins, he said, "Glad to see you, Walter. Can't imagine what you're doing around here. I understand that you went to the cleaners on Aneroid."

I could have let out a yell right there and then that would have extinguished all the Neon signs on Ninth street, but I had to prove I could take it.

"Don't let me keep you from your washing, men." I said quietly, as George tossed a pair of pajamas into the tub and the resultant splash of suds made my left ear believe it was in for a Drene shampoo.

Just to be sociable and keep the conversational ball rolling, I said, "What about football?"

That was just a side remark, mind you, but it was as if I had yelled "fire."

Marshall jumped up, pulled on a headgear. Shoulder pads popped out on Espey. A gang of Indians stormed through one door and a group of truck drivers through another. The Indians went into a huddle, emerged and Marshall grabbed a bundle of wet wash and went around the cash register to a touchdown. Marshall drop-kicked Jockey Noboy Jacobs over the dry-cleaning department to add the extra point.

The whistle blew before the next kick-off and a big red, white and blue banner unfurled which read: "To be continued next week."

I learned afterward that Marshall had a week-end engagement. Oh, to be a laundry owner and have my week-ends begin Tuesday night.

But there is big news at Ninth and H streets, kidding to the contrary. It is regarding the season tickets that the Redskins are selling for their 1938 games. Despite the fact that the tickets have been on sale only a week, more than $1,200 has been invested by Washington pro football fans. Yesterday, Espey and his assistants took in $376.

With the football season still six months ahead, the advance sale already has been more than it was from the period of June to September last year.

It just doesn't seem to add up that "In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to pro football tickets."

Ossie Bluege's appearance in the "rookie" line-up in that practice game was like Old Mother Hubbard participating in a "big apple" . . . if you have been wondering what a golf pro does on a rainy winter day, well, he goes out and shoots a 68 . . . at least that's what Walter Cunningham, pro at Burning Tree, did yesterday on his home course . . . out in 36 and home in 33, six birdies and only used 28 putts . . . he had 11 one-putt greens . . . His brother, Frank, shot a 71 . . . he went out in 35 and came home in 36 . . . I went out in the family car and came home in a huff . . . I like the one about the ingenious farmer who noticed that his cow was always wading in the fishing stream so on Friday mornings he tied a fishing line to Bossie's tail and let her troll for the evening meal . . . I'll bet they had creamed codfish . . . of the five record football crowds in this country, Notre Dame figured in four . . . the clash of the Irish and Southern California in 1929 drew 112,912, the tops . . . on October 4, 1913, the Nats used eight pitchers in a game against the Red Sox and won, 9 to 8 . . . In 1921, Stuffy McInnis, first-basing for the Red Sox, had a fielding percentage of .999 for 152 games . . . I wonder if the fans booed him for that one error?

66 Teams Await Opening of Post-A. A. U. Basketball Championships

Annual Cage Race Begins Tomorrow

Strongest Field Ever Assembled Awaits Action.

By Jack Munhall.

Washington's greatest amateur court event will be launched tomorrow night when Alexander F. Jones, managing editor of The Washington Post, uncoils his trusty left arm to start a 66-team scramble for the eleventh annual Post-A. A. U. basketball championships.

As the former University of Minnesota athlete arises to toss the first ball at Tech gym at 7:30 o'clock, part of the strongest field ever assembled for the tournament will step on three floors to battle for city titles in seven classes. These range from the new 85-pound to the girls' and boys' unlimited.

Although the field, save for the girls' unlimited, fell a little short of record proportions, it is undoubtedly the fastest and most evenly matched that has ever entered the event. This was the opinion expressed last night by Winfree Johnson, chairman of the A. A. U. basketball committee. He forsaw a free-for-all struggle in every class.

Ten Have Title Chance.

In the boys' 130, 145 and unlimited, especially, competition should be at high pitch. Of the 10 teams registered for the unlimited, at least 10 are conceded a titular chance while the defending champions in the other two classes have forfeited their titles to seek honors in heavier classes.

With the absence of Senate Beer, in the 145, and the Boys Club of Washington Fleetwings in the 130, races in both divisions will be thrown wide open. The Fleetwings are the same team that in three successive years annexed the 100, 115 and 130-pound titles.

The race for the girls' unlimited championship has been enlivened by the failure of the city champion Georgetown A. C. to enter. Now four sextets, Sherwood A. C., Rockville A. A., Department of Agriculture and United Typewriters seem to have the inside track.

For the first time in the history of the tournament, teams have been seeded in the boy's unlimited. Johnson and Joe Bertolini, meeting yesterday at the Boys Club of Washington, figured out drawings and seedings for the boys' 145 and unlimited classes. Without attempting to rate the quartet in order of ability, they named Senate Beer, Regal Clothiers, Federal Bureau of Investigation and Delaware & Hudson as the cream of the group.

F. B. I. Makes Debut.

Using these teams as the foundation of the brackets, the remaining teams were drawn to meet them. F. B. I. makes its debut tomorrow night against K. of C., while Senate and Regal go into action Friday night. Delaware & Hudson will play either Monday or Tuesday.

The tournament has been guaranteed the best possible officiating by the acquisition of four referees from the Approved Board of Basketball Officials. The whistle blowers named are Dallas Shirley, "Shag" Shaughnessy, Babe Gearty and Hobie O'Meara.

Weighin-in for the teams will be held one-half hour before the teams are scheduled to play. Failure to meet this obligation will result in the banishment of the defaulting players.

All those holding A. A. U. cards will be admitted free of charge tomorrow night only. Admission will be 25 cents.

Games this week will be held at Tech, Merrick Boys Club and Boys Club of Washington. Beginning next week Roosevelt gym also will be available.

85-Pound Class.
At Boys Club of Washington.
6:15 p. m.—Merrick Boys Club vs. Boys Club of Washington, Northeast Branch.

Three Owls On All-Stars

Mike Petrosky, Georgetown on 2d Team.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 15.—Temple's champion Owls placed three men on the All-Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball Conference team picked today for the Associated Press by the six coaches.

Temple's representatives on the all-star array were tall Mike Bloom at center, Don Shields at forward, and Ed Boyle at guard. Rounding out the team were Sol Miehoff, sharp-shooting Penn State forward, and Ed Spotovich, Pitt's stellar guard.

Bloom, the all-star center choice for the third successive year, and Shields were the only unanimous choices, each polling the maximum of 12 points, but Miehoff, with 10, and Boyle, with 9, were close behind. Spotovich, however, had to get a "judges' decision" to outpoint Carnegie Tech's Billy Miller for the remaining first-team berth. Each received six points but Spotovich received all his for guard. Miller was mentioned by two coaches for forward and two for guard.

The selections (points awarded on a basis of two for the first-team selection and one for second-team selection):

FIRST TEAM.	Position

Mickey Walker to Give Abrams Ring Pointers in Workout Today

Former Champion Expected to Polish Up George's Rough Spots in Session Here.

Mickey Walker, the "Toy Bulldog" who once ruled the middleweight and light-heavyweight division with a pair of cast-iron hands, will don the punching pillows again this afternoon in an informal scuffle with one of the most promising young middleweights around today—George Abrams. The pair will square-off backstage at Lake's Opera House, alias the Gayety Theater, for members of the press, exclusively.

Walker is appearing here with his own burlesque company, while Abrams is tuning up for his bout with Jimmy Jones scheduled Monday night at the Arena. Mickey's specialty is tap-dancing and ad-libing, and he does both well, according to reliable sources. Introduced from the Arena ring last Monday night he received a tremendous ovation, eloquent testimony that his popularity has not waned.

The chief purpose in arranging the workout is to have Walker give Abrams a few pointers on proper ring conduct for a prospective champion. George has proved he has native ability, that he is game, and anxious to get ahead, but glaring errors have cropped up in his work and retarded his progress. Walker, it is hoped, will spot these during the workout and not only suggest remedies, but show the lad how to get the most out of his work.

Also on Monday's card, incidentally, is a six-round semifinal involving Jones' brother, Ivan Nedomatsky, former Southern Conference lightweight and welterweight title holder, and El Brookman. This may steal the show, for both lads are tough customers and willing mixers.

The Punch Line . . .

By Lewis F. Atchison.

With exception of Columbus University's team, which enters en masse every year under the Jewis Community Center's banner, the District A. A. U. tourney boxing lists announced this morning reveal that collegiate clouters have avoided the affair with almost studied indifference. There must be a reason, and it's a good one.

The amateurs, for all their faults and lack of coaching, are smarter than their book-wise brethren in the ring, and in a majority of cases a trifle tougher. Not that club fighters aren't coached, and well coached by capable men, nor all collegians weak or puny, but records bear out the statement.

Amateur fighters, as a rule, are grocery clerks, errand boys, bootblacks and, in a few instances, school students who love the sport for the exercise and the pittance of publicity it brings. Most of them help support their families and do not have the time to train that is available to college boys. They have to fight themselves into condition. Again, they are taught infighting—a mode of attack strictly taboo in college rings, and encouraged to use it.

Hence, when a collegian steps into a ring under amateur rules he is at a distinct disadvantage. He can't protect himself against a body attack, the most damaging offensive in the game, and he can't retaliate iin kind beause he knows nothing about it. The only avenue open to him is a knockobut punch to the jaw, and even the rankest ringman usually knows enough to keep his chin tucked safely behind a protecting shoulder.

The outstanding cases on record begin with Ivan Nedomatsky, who as Maryland's sensational sophomore lightweight, won the Southern Conference crown and earned the impressive sobriquet of "Ivan theTerrible." His double-left hook to the body and chin felled 95 per cent of his opponents in the first round, and he could drill a hole in a brick wall with his right. Friefly, he looked like the most promising pugilistic prospect to come down the pike in a decade.

Ivan entered the tournament, but got no farther than the first round, where a game and able Italian tagged Pete DiMaggio whipped him decisively in the first round. It was a startling upset, and Nedomatsky, convinced of the error of his ways, competed in no more amateur tourneys, but confined his activities to the more healthful Southern Conference clime.

DiMaggio, incidentally, also turned back Eddie Thibodeau, Catholic University's ace lightweight, in the same tournament, and Cardinal ringmen have been as scarce as goldfish in the Potomac since.

Next came Mike Lombardo, a better-than-average welterweight and a Marylander in the bargain. On form he looked like the best thing his size in the tournament, but red-headed Steve Thompson, who aspired to a major league baseball career rather than ring fame, outpointed him. Nearly everyone, including Mister Lombardo, was greatly astonished by this turn of events, and nary on Old Liner has entered since.

Columbus has yet to say "uncle," figuratively speaking, despite the fact that it has suffered serious reverses in the tournament. Jim McNamara's boys have won their share of laurels, but Columbus, or Jewish Community Center, if you prefer, lost two notable bouts. George Cox, a welterweight, lost to Jim King, and Buddy Lazzear was outpunched by Roy Crombie.

The Lazzear case is particularly noteworthy, for in collegiate competition he had no peer, and the Navigators, if memory serves correctly, met and defeated some good teams. He possessed only a fair right hand, but had a punishing left hook and jab that almost tore holes in opponents. His left was so potent, as a matter of fact, suspicion was rife that Lazzear was a legitimate southpaw who changed his style and stance to get the full benefit of his southpaw punch. He caught a lot of boys—most of them, unaware, but ran into a snag when he met up with Crombie.

Tonight another amateur tournament gets under way at the Arena, and there will be fighting galore—good, bad and indifferent. You'll see 'em all shapes and sizes and temperaments, and you should see some fair fighting. But you won't see any college boys. The going is a little too tough.

A. A. U. Boxers Launch Quest For D. C. Titles

List of 80 Star Amateurs Entered as Prelims Start Tonight.

Approximately 80 hand-picked prospective ring champions, of all shapes, ages and sizes, launch their quest for city amateur title tonight at Turner's Arena, where the preliminary bouts of the annual District A. A. U. tournament will be held. The first bout is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

The tournament will be conducted in easy stages this year with more preliminary bouts scheduled next Wednesday and the semifinals on Saturday, March 26. Finals are scheduled April 2, with action confined, exclusively to the Arena.

Standing head and shoulders above the entire entry list is Bobby Schwartz, of Alexandria, who captured the all-American crown last winter at Boston. His last appearance locally was early last month, when he appeared with the local Golden Gloves champions against a picked Boston team. On form, Schwartz should retain his title, although it will not be as easy as it sounds.

A half-dozen boys' clubs are seeking the team crown.

Nats Begin Battle for Jobs Today as Cards Invade Orlando

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 15.—The Nats, who for two weeks have been out merely for the exercise, tomorrow will begin their battle for jobs. St. Louis' gas house gang will be moving in on the Washington squad for the first exhibition game of the season and there will be no more trifling.

Manager Bucky Harris will cast his opening-day line-up from the results of his athletes' performances in the 20-odd exhibition games and at this writing two positions on the Washington club, aside from the pitching staffs, are as open as the great outdoors.

Al Simmons' impressive slugging in the batting drills counts for naught. The veteran must prove his superiority over young George Case for the right field post and the exhibition schedule has been designated by Manager Harris as the proving grounds. The man who gets the job will be the man who serves the club best from now until April 18, when the shootin' starts.

Harris is open-minded, too, concerning the first base position. He concedes neither the veteran Joe Kuhel nor his young challenger, Jimmy Wasdell, any edge at this point. Kuhel can win the job or lose it by his play during the next four weeks. And Wasdell, similarly can win his way into the regular line-up or prove his unfitness for the job.

Harris has been given the office by Owner Clark Griffith to "give the rookies the breaks," but he is in no mood to sacrifice any power simply to humor the Nats' owner. Case and Wasdell must have a very definite edge over Simmons and Kuhel before the veterans will be dislodged.

The Nats' manager is most curious on another point, however. He is eager to appraise the talents of his young catchers under fire, particularly Mickey Livingston. Young Livingston represents the Nats' only hope of providing adequate relief for the veteran Rick Ferrell, and Harris is eager to convince himself that the Chattanooga graduate can hold down the No. 2 catching job.

To satisfy himself as to the merits of his prize rookies—Ken Chase and Joe Krakauskas—Harris will give the pair of youthful pitchers plentiful work in the exhibition battles. The pair are already included in Harris' plans as regular starters next season, but final decision will be reserved until after they go to the post against the big league teams the Nats will meet in the spring.

Ray Phebus and Dutch Leonard are another pair who will be sent to the mound with great frequency by Harris. If the Nats' pitching is to be bolstered next season the young talent will be the source of the new strength, and there will be no lack of work for the aforementioned quartet.

Any sensational performances by the second flight rookie pitchers will be in the nature of a surprise. To put it bluntly, Harris does not expect help from any of his pitching rookies other than Chase, Krakauskas, Leonard and Phebus.

The veteran holders of every other position on the club are fixtures at the post. Buddy Myer, Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis have no serious challengers for their infield jobs, and Mal Almada and Johnny Stone can harly be dislodged from outfield posts.

Tomorrow, when Frankie Frisch leads his Cardinals onto Tinker Field, Jimmy DeShong, Elon Hogsett and Monte Weaver will divide the Nats' pitching in three-inning shifts. Kuhel will be started at first base and Simmons will be in rightfield, but Waddell and Case will relieve their veteran rivals in the later innings.

With the Cardinals will be Slingin' Sammy Baugh, who as yet, has not impressed anybody with his infield play. But the Redskin ace will be given full opportunity to break into the line-up, due to the Cardinals' lack of potent infielders.

The Gas House gang was the Nats' pet victim in the exhibition series last year. Four times they met the St. Louis crew and four times they won—twice by shutouts.

Young George Case was a more springhtly individual in the Nats' workout today. He is recovering rapidly from a sprained toe and was swatting the pitching sharply throughout the morning drill.

Knowing, 1-2 Choice, Wins Tropical Sprint By 8-Length Margin

Gelding Never Headed in Defeating Mosawtre and Long Face; Bomar Stable Shows Sharp Juvenile in Our Chuckil.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 15.—Knowing, a 5-year-old gelding representing Henry Lustig's Longchamp Farms, scored the easiest victory of the meeting in the featured Flagler Purse of 5½ furlongs here today. Closing at odds of 1 to 2, the Dunboyne gelding romped home by eight lengths in 1:05 4-5, equaling the fastest time of the Gables session. Sterling Young was astride the chestnut veteran, thus scoring a double.

W. J. (Buddy) Hirsch's Mosawtre, away from competition since last September at Belmone Park, was hard pressed to save the place by a half-length from Jesse Spencer's Long Face. Six horses went postward, with Knowing regarded as the "surest thing" of the meeting.

Knowing won only one race in 15 starts last year and had failed to click here this winter. However, his recent bang-up second to Black River in a race at today's distance made him appear a standout.

Our Chuckie Surprises.

The gelding was first away from the stalls. He shot out of the inside post position and sprinted clear in short order. Mosawtre and Long Face, heads apart, gave chase, with the others far behind. Knowing increased his margin without being extended and Young was looking back through the last furlong. Mosawtre, after his long rest, held on gamely to cling to his narrow advantage over Long Face. Kearsarge, Forest Play and Exhibitor were badly outrun.

The Bomar Stable, owned by Bohn & Markey, of Detriot, uncovered a handsome young colt in the half-mile dash for maiden juveniles that ushered in the program here today. Our Chuckie, a son of Jean Val Jean, made his first start a winning one by three lengths. Paying $11.30 for $2, he took the track just after the start and outfooted the capacity field to finish in 48 seconds flat. Spanish Dot, always closest to the pacemaker, saved the place by a head from Rippler. The heavily played Friendly Paul was taken the overland route and finished fourth.

The second race also was captured by a first-time starter. Country Lass defeated 11 other 3-year-old maidens to return $24.40, running the 6 furlongs in 1:12 4-5. Pumpgun was an easy second, a length and a half back and three lengths clear of Lignum Vitae, one of the rank outsiders. Country Lass broke well and quickly sprinted to the front. The Reigh Count filly disposed of Brogan and Don Cossack, then had enough left to thwart the bid of Pumpgun in the last quarter mile.

Osirando Worthy Choice.

Osirando justified his role of favoritism in the 6-furlong third contest. Breaking in the middle of the bunch, the gelding was urged to the front before reaching the turn. He opened up a wide lead but Sterling Young had to put the $8.90 for $2 chance under a drive in the last sixteenth to assure victory over Two Tricks. The latter was beaten a length and a half while garnering the place by a half length. Flosilda closed fastest of all to earn third money over Melody Maid.

Lest Battalion, a 16 to 1 shot, ran to promising morning trials and eked out a nose victory in the blanket finish of the fourth race. Judge Leer, on the inside, was second and Saunderstown, the favorite, third in the three-way camera battle. Bay Bubble, Maebob and Ladfield, the early leaders, faltered halfway from home, allowing the three "payoff" horses to take up the issue. Saunderstown could not hold a slight advantage. Judge Leer finished fastest of all on the rail.

Jockey Young missed a triple when his mount in the sixth race, the favored Say When, finished second to Grey Fluff, a $20.80-for-$2 hazard. Highpool was third. Grey Fluff broke like a bullet from the outside position, shook off Chispa in the first 3 furlongs and continued gamely to the end, scoring by a length. Say When, well up from the break, could not gain on the winner through the stretch while beating Highpool by a length and a half for the place.

Washington Club. It was he who brought Jake Powell out of Dayton in the Middle Atlantic League after Griffith had given up hope that the Takoma boy would ever blossom as a big leaguer. Under Cambria, Powell was a sensation at Albany, and the Nats called him in. They used Powell in a trade with the Yankees for Ben Chapman and then traded Chapman for the Ferrell brothers and Mell Almada. Thus it is that Cambria is responsible for that trio.

If Joe Krakauskas justifies his promise to bloom as a pitching sensation with the Nats, the Washington Club will have Cambria to thank. For it was the little round man who snagged Krakauskas off the Canadian lots four years ago. Utility Infielder Johnny Mihalic and Utility Outfielder Taft Wright are also products of the Cambria snatch-system.

The Yanks last fall offered Cambria $10,000 for Krakauskas, but he was delivered to the Nats in consideration of $1 and other valuables. If he makes good with Washington, Cambria will receive the equivalent of the Yankee offer—or more—but Griffith is taking no risk in the matter. And Cambria is willing to charge off any loss in the arrangement to advice-of-counsel fees. For Griffith, it's one of those beautiful friendships!

132 Pounds In Dixie for War Admiral

Seabiscuit Is Given 130 and Aneroid 120 for Pimlico Struggle.

War Admiral, with 132 pounds, received the call over Seabiscuit, which was assigned 130 pounds in the $20,000 added Dixie Handicap to be decided at Pimlico on Wednesday, May 11, according to the weights for the event which were released by Handicapper Charles McLennan late today. The announcement has been eagerly awaited, as it is the first time this year a handicapper has been burdened with the difficult task of assigning weights to the two thoroughbreds; one the 1937 "horse of the year" and the other the handicap champion of last year.

Following the two top weights is Aneroid, victor over Seabiscuit the week prior to the Santa Anita Handicap and fifth to him and Stagehand in the 100 grand California classic, with 120 pounds; Pompoon, second to War Admiral in the Preakness and Kentucky Derby and third to Stagehand in the Santa Anita Handicap, with 118 pounds. Snark was rated 1 pound better than Pompoon and Bing Crosby's Ligaroti was assigned 118. Burning Star, Calumet Dick and Eagle Pass were each asigned 17 and Rex Flag, Scintillator and Finance each received 116. The remaining 47 eligibles were scaled down to 100 pounds.

The Dixie Handicap comes up for its thirty-fourth renewal this year and will be the secondary feature of a program calling for a stake race each day at the Maryland Jockey Club's Pimlico race course. The Preakness, which this year assumes the role of America's richest race for 3-year-olds with an estimated gross value of $80,000, has already attracted 76 of the leading 3-year-olds, including the current sensation, Stagehand, and will be the feature of the spring racing season. Both events will be decided within four days and because of the impressive lists of nominations they are sure to attract record crowds to the historic Baltimore course.

The complete list of weights for the Dixie Handicap, which is decided at a distance of a mile and three-sixteenths follows:

OUR CHUCKIE settled into his stride rapidly, shook off SPANISH DOT rounding the turn, opened up a winning lead through the stretch and was taken in hand nearing the finish. SPANISH DOT, always in nearest pursuit of the leader, continued determinedly under a drive to hold RIPPLER safe. The latter, hard ridden and slipping through on the inside entering the stretch, closed boldly, but could not overtake the leaders, and finished stoutly.

FRIENDLY PAUL, trifle slow to get going, swung to the outside on the stretch turn and finished stoutly.

COUNTRY LASS, away forwardly, moved to the front rapidly and raced BROGAN into defeat the first half mile, continued with determination under pressure and shook off PUMPOUN in the last sixteenth mile. PUMPOUN, a prominent factor on the outside under light restraint, moved up stoutly entering the stretch, but then faltered when the final test came. LIGNUM VITAE worked his way up steadily on the outside and outlasted MAETAKE in the stretch drive.

Daily Double, Our Chuckie and Country Lass, Paid $323.10.

TWO TRICKS gradually bettered her position on the outside and closed gamely to punishment. FLOSILDA also improved her position around the leaders and outlasted MELODY MAID. The latter, a trifle sore going to the post, came through on the inside in the last quarter mile, but hung right at the end.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LOST BATTALION, $34.10, $14.70, $7.20; JUDGE LEER, $7.30, $4.60; SAUNDERSTOWN, $3.60.

LOST BATTALION on the inside in the early stages, came around the leaders entering the stretch, responded courageously to pressure and outlasted his opponents in the final drive. JUDGE LEER broke a trifle tardy, improved his position along the inside after leaving the backstretch, took a brief lead in the last 20 yards, but hung in the last strides. SAUNDERSTOWN also broke a trifle slow, had to be hard hustled to assume command in the opening three furlongs and, holding on gamely when the final test came, won the way in the final strides. LADFIELD finished with his usual good courage.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:27. Off 4:29. Winner, Longchamps Farm's ch. g. KNOWING took command at once, set a rapid pace in the early running and drew out into a long lead in the opening half mile, and was taken in hand through the stretch to win as his rider pleased. MOSAWTRE, hard urged and going in nearest pursuit of KNOWING on the inside, continued gamely through the stretch to outstay LONG FACE. The latter, on the outside and in close attendance of MOSAWTRE the entire trip, hung slightly in the stretch run. KEARSARGE and FOREST PLAY raced on their own courage the entire trip. EXHIBITOR dropped out of contention immediately after the start.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $900; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 4:57. Off 4:58½. Winner, R. Grosz' ch. or br. f. Girdler Sees No Limit to Steel Future Republic Chairman Opens $15,000,000 Continuous Strip Mill.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, March 15.—There is almost literally no limit to steel's future markets, Tom Girdler, Republic Steel Corporation chairman, said tonight:

"Entirely aside from the automobile field," he declared, "there is the potential demand for strip steel for products such as refrigerators, containers, air conditioning and building—just to mention a few major markets. Not a day passes but what steel is being adapted to some new use."

Girdler spoke at the formal opening of Republic's $15,000,000 continuous strip mill here. Proclaiming it "the largest in the world," he observed: "The making of steel cannot be handled by small companies, because of the enormous size of the production units required to manufacture steel on an economical basis."

Commenting on contentions that mills of the type reduce employment, Girdler asserted the steel industry in recent years has employed more men than ever before.

"The number of men required to run the mill itself represents only a small fraction of the employment made possible by the mill," he said. "Every ton of steel going through this mill means that men are employed back in the ore mines, men are employed in the coal mines, men are employed on the steamships and on the railroads, men are employed in the blast furnaces and the open hearths."

In Republic's annual report, mailed today to its 57,000 stockholders, Girdler expressed optimism "for the long pull," but said "prospects for the immediate future do not appear too hopeful."

Aid to Shipping Asked in House By Committee

Mortgage Insurance and Subsidies for Merchant Marine Sought.

The House Merchant Marine Committee recommened a series of new Government aids to shipping yesterday in an effort to rehabilitate this country's merchant marine.

Subsidies for intercoastal shipping, Government insurance of mortgages on ships built for domestic service and financial aid for transoceanic aviation were among its proposals.

The committee said national defense was "an important, if not the primary, justification for the maintenance of American vessels in foreign trade."

"We must have ships built for conversion into armed vessels in time of war," the report said, "and ships that may be used as colliers, fuel carriers, work ships, hospital ships, airplane carriers and for other defense purposes."

The committee concurred with the maritime commission in its conclusion that immediate replacement of many ships is imperative. In an effort to facilitate that replacement by private interests.

Subsidies from $1 to $2 per displacement ton were urged for ships in the intercoastal trade, provided they have speeds of from 16½ to 25 knots and accommodations for 200 passengers.

The committee said that as a result of new regulations occasioned largely by the destruction of the Chesapeake Bay steamer City of Baltimore and the Morro Castle and Mohawk disasters, 61 vessels were withdrawn from passenger service.

Rising Stocks, Mill Buying, Lift Wheat

Rains Offset Dust-Storm Damage Reported From Southwest.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 15.—Stimulated by upturns of securities, as well as by futures purchasing for exporters and domestic millers, the Chicago Wheat Maret rose 1½ cents maximum today.

Reports of dust storms in some localities southwest of here furnished initial impetus for wheat prices upturns, but chances of crop damage were afterward considerably reduced by rains and by prospective additional moisture.

A sudden rally in Liverpool wheat quotations, together with a late sharp recovery of French francs were construed as reassuring for friends of higher wheat prices here. The Liverpool Wheat Market, which at one stage showed 1¾ cents drop, rallied subsequently to about 1 cent net gain in some cases.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ¼ to 1 cent above yesterday's finish, May, 86⅛@86¼, July 83⅛@83¼, corn ¼@½ up, May 58⅛, July 60, oats unchanged to ¼ advance, rye showing ⅝ to 1 cent bulge, and provisions varying from 5 cents setback to 10 cents climb.

Peanut Deals Begin On Produce Exchange

New York, March 15 (AP).—For the first time in its history the New York Produce Market Exchange traded in shelled peanuts in the futures mraket today. The first sale was by R. Schmidt to Henken & Co., a contract for May delivery at 6.35 cents a pound. Ten contracts were made in the first hour. Contracts are for 30,000 pounds, basis U. S. Standard No. 1 shelled white Spanish peanuts, freight paid or allowed to New York.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Gather Strengt hin More Active Trading; Dollar Climbs Against Europe; Wheat Higher.

New York, March 15.—Prices hardened in most financial markets and dollars advanced further against foreign currencies. United States bonds were helped by the prospect of additions to excess reserves. The money market was not visibly affected by the moderate turnover incidental to the first quarterly income tax payments. Stocks closed with the month's best gains in a turnover of more than 700,000 shares. May wheat rallied half a cent to 86¼ cents a bushel in the Chicago market.

Stocks opened with considerable irregularity, but the tone hardened as the day wore on and best prices were reached in the last hour, at which time leading issues were able to show gains of 1 to 3 points or more. This marked the third consecutive day of stock price advance, the first such achievement in several weeks. Steels and metals led the recovery, with chemical, oil, rubber and agricultural sections well backed.

United States Steel common, and Bethlehem rose about 2 points each. Smelters climbed 2 points to head the mining crowd. United States Rubber rose more than a point on the largest turnover in the list. Firestone, in which no sales were reported yesterday, moved forward. Standard Oil, Texas, Seaboard and Continental were the favorites in a rehabilitated oil division.

Western Union Weakens.

Chemical shares were shoved 1 to 4 points higher. This was led by duPont. General Motors, Chrysler and Yellow Truck looked almost buoyant at times, but activity was not impressive. Railroad shares were firm on smaller volume Southern Pacific was weak for a while and Union Pacific dragged. Utilities were narrow.

Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, Case, Deere and Harvester pointed upward. Western Union sank into a new low ground and the bonds were distressed. Greyhound was one of the most active stocks and it rose into new high ground.

Accepting at face value all the reports and expressed hopes of improving business, the strong tone in stocks still left a gap in explanation. European markets continued in a highly nervous condition, with heavy sales of securities, except American issues, pressure on the currencies and no slackening of the rush of capital into gold hoards or into United States dollars. Actual trading in United States securities for foreign account was reported as slack. Some brokerage firms said they had a slight balance of selling orders for foreign account, but the price of gold in London fell to a quotation (because of sterling's weakness) which made shipments here profitable, and undoubtedly large foreign balances in New York now are accumulating.

Tax Hopes Rising.

While those balances are a call upon our gold, there is by no means any early possibility of the calls being exercised. It is rather more likely that our money market will soften a little, with a further rise in gilt-edged investments, unless steps be taken to offset the influx of "hot" money. Meanwhile, aside from the threat of immediate hostilities, the panicky rush of Great Britain, France and lesser nations into greater rearmament efforts promises a further strain on European currencies and brings the day of devaluation, inflation and financial collapse nearer.

During the process certain industries in this country—particularly the metal and steel trades, the aviation and automotive industries, and other war munitions—may enjoy a fillip of orders. Our own military expenditures are likely to rise. Just the same, the stock market does not act much as though it were seeking war brides. The opinion prevails that the firm stand taken by certain Senators against President Roosevelt's tax proposal and in favor of repeal of the worst of the existing tax laws is the main bull point.

Pure Oil.

Not all members of the Pure Oil preferred syndicate are satisfied with the SEC. They are not allowed to buy stock above 74½, whereas dealers and others not members of the syndicate can buy and sell at any price. Today the stock was selling around 78½ and seemed to have a satisfactory market, but some syndicate members did not regard it as a natural market. They pointed out that only a relatively small part of the $43,000,000 of stock is for sale and there is an apparent shortage. What will happen to the supply if the stock gets around 80 is what concerns some of the distributors.

New York, March 15 (AP).—The French franc, after a precipitous decline the past few days to a new 11-year low, steadied itself today in foreign exchange trading, closing up .025 of a cent. Foreign exchange circles attributed the rise to short covering by speculative interests.

The pound sterling was off half a cent, Belgian belgas gained .005 of a cent, and Swiss francs were unchanged. Netherlands guilders were off .09 of a cent, after recovering more than half of earlier losses. All these currencies were at new lows for the year.

There was no trading in the Austrian schilling, due to its unsettled status as a result of the latest Hitler coup.

Cotton Rallies After Decline

New York, March 15 (AP).—March liquidation had an early depressing influence on cotton today but the market later turned steadier in sympathy with the action of other markets. May rallied from 8.88 to 8.97 and closed at 8.92, with final prices 4 to 8 points net higher.

The market opened 6 points lower to 1 higher, with March depressed by the issuance of 103 notices. After the March offerings had been absorbed and the notices stopped, prices rallied to net gains of 8 to 12 points. There was rebuying by recent sellers, who were encouraged by firmness of stocks and grains, but slight reactions from the best developed in the late trading under realizing.

Announcing
A Greater Service to Investors

FIVE years ago, Babson's Reports broke all precedents with the announcement of a Supervised Investment Service for $120 a year. In taking that forward step, we accepted a fact well known to every seasoned investor: It is utterly impossible for anybody to supervise successfully all securities. That was why we focused our efforts on certain issues which offered the real opportunities.

The practical results of such concentration have been impressive. For example, in a test period covering 35 months, THE BABSON SUPERVISED LIST ROSE IN MARKET VALUE 32%, WHILE THE DOW-JONES COMPOSITE AVERAGE ADVANCED ONLY 21%.

Based on four years of successful experience, we have extended our supervision to a somewhat larger list of securities which include the market's real income—producers and profit-makers. This enlarged supervision means an even more comprehensive service to you as an investor.

Conserve Your Principal

To increase and protect your income and profits is the purpose of Babson's Reports. In the thirty-four years this organization has been serving investors, improvements have been continuous. Clients have benefitted steadily.

Write for Special Circular

Today's enlarged Supervised Service constitutes still another forward stride. Let us show you how it fits your personal needs and how it can relieve you of investment worries and burdens.

Complete Bill Is Revised at Russian Troika

Caucasian Number Now Winds Up Show Instead of Gypsies.

By Chanticleer

A brand-new show is the floor feature at the Russian Troika. Topping the bill is Mme. Strelfka, noted Russian ballerina, and a Caucasian number now winds up the show "Lubovpachrum" is something you'll enjoy; also the Twb Grenadiers, based on Napoleon's disastrous invasion of Russia in 1812.

The new swing quartet at the Hi-Hat Lounge is proving more popular every day. Next time you drop in ask Jack to give you a demonstration with his bass, which is bigger than Jack himself.

The Pall Mall room of the Raleigh takes you to the "Land of Aloha" tonight. The lovely Miss Jeanne Carmine, in traditoinal grass skirt, will present the native "hula," as will the Virginia Hunter dancers.

Zanette and Menya, new Pall Mall dance team, have some exotic ballroom numbers. To get everyone into the spirit of the occasion, Hawaiian girls will greet guests with presents of Hawaiian leis.

Charles Carlisle would get rave notices in any language. His personal appearance at the Shoreham is by special arrangement with the N. B. C.

Entertainment at the Shoreham also features the Honey Sisters, held over by popular demand. They specialize in their "Dance of the Savages," a spectacular fantasy presented to the music of "Savage Serenade."

Nine acts, starting with a colorful and very captivating Spanish number are announced at the Lotus. Next in this week's revue is the specialty dance team of Beryl and Martinez, introducing something new in the Cuban Danzant and that sensational dance, The Fado.

Marion Dawn and Buddy Shaner make a great hit with their singing.

Al Norton also sings to Bill Strickland and his Capitolian orchestra is accompaniment.

The Bamboo Gardens is planning a holiday celebration with the Winter Garden Revue Girls pulling a St. Patrick's number out of their limitless supply of routines.

The brithday is ended but the charming voice of the new Mayfair songstress, Nadea Andrea, still can be heard at the Cafe of All Nations. Perry Martin is still on hand and the two sing very well together.

Carr Nan Siegler, pianist in the Johnny Shaw Band at the Madrillon has done nice arrangements on a dance number that goes by the name of "Congo."

The patrons at Brinkleys are looking forward to a true St. Patrick celebration under the capable direction of the Irish Mac McCaffery.

Milt Davis and his orchestra entertain nightly at the Rainbow room of the Hotel Hamilton. It's delightful during the cocktail hour or later for dining and dancing.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

There are two distinct types of shaded bids: one based on hands rich in playing tricks but a little short in defensive tricks, the other, up to par defensively but anemic in playing strength. Of the two I greatly prefer the latter, and for this reason:

If you pick up a hand with 2½ to 3 honor-tricks in it, but with poor intermediates, you must either enter the auction at the one level or forever hold your peace, particularly if you are vulnerable. Admittedly, you may get a chance for a delayed takeout double, but this is only a possibility. The risk is great that if you fail to bid originally you will be shut out completely. In the other type hand, where you have an excellent suit and about 2 honor-tricks, this risk is negligible since with sufficient winners there is nothing to prevent your entering the auction at the top or even the three level. Consider East's bid in the hand shown below. It is the type that I do not like.

East, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.

	♠ 8 5 ♡ K 7 6 ◇ 5 3 ♣ A J 7 6 3 2
♠ A K J 9 3 2 ♡ 2 ◇ 10 9 8 4 ♣ 9 5	West North East South	♠ 6 ♡ J 10 9 8 5 ◇ 4 2 ♣ A
	♠ Q 10 7 4 ♡ A Q ◇ K Q J 7 6 2 ♣ 8

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	2 ◇	Dbl.	3 ♣
Dbl.	3 ◇	Dbl.	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♡	Dbl.	Pass	Pass
Pass

I do not contend that the bad result East-West had on this board was solely attributable to East's opening bid. It is a fact, however, that such bids lead to bad results with great regularity. East, of course, would not have left in the two diamond double if it had come around to him. He could hardly fail to double the rescue bid of three clubs, since he himself had such splendid club defense against that suit. When three diamonds was doubled, he undoubtedly should have passed, but the trouble was that he had been so doubtful from the very start over his own bid from a defensive viewpoint that he was afraid to permit the double to stand. He knew West to be a hair-trigger doubler and uneasily felt that West was counting on him to win at least one or two, possibly several, heart tricks. This, he knew, he could not do, and after North's club bid and South's prompt takeout he felt that club tricks for his side would be equally remote. Hence, since he could deliver only one sure trick to the defense, he rescued with hearts.

But how could West know what was going on in East's mind? From West's point of view there could be only one reason for East's rescue, namely, the judgment that three diamonds doubled would not give East-West as high a return as they could make otherwise. That "otherwise" could only be through a game bid and made. It was inconceivable (West reasoned) that after he had doubled two diamonds East would take it upon himself to decide that even three diamonds could not be defeated. Actually, even with East's miserable defensive support, three diamonds could have been handily defeated. But the feeling of insecurity in East, engendered by his own original bid, led to a less-than-average match-point score for East-West, since, of course, four hearts was easily defeated.

Bones Found in Virginia Identified as Those Of an Ancient Zeuglodon (Sea Serpent to You)

Creature Wandered in From Home in Gulf Stream.

Hustle, Va., March 15 (AP).—The village of Hustle was in a bustle today over discovery of the bones of a big prehistoric mammal which a professor identified as a zeuglodon, or ancient "sea serpent."

Barbee Spindle, farmer and postmaster at this Essex County hamlet, found bones in a creek on his farm and started the eager digging which by today had brought out more than 200 sections.

The pieces varied in length from 6 to 9 inches and 24 vertebrae joints measured 20 feet. Scientists say that the zeuglodon generally was about 70 feet long.

Dr. J. W. Bailey, professor of paleology at the University of Richmond, identified the bones from photographs as those of a zeuglodon. He said several had been uncovered in the southeastern section of this country but that he never heard of one being found in a mid-Atlantic or northern State. He planned to inspect the postmaster's find.

The professor believed that the ancient "serpent" wandered from its home in the Gulf Stream. Essex County is in tidewater Virginia on the Rappahannock River.

Bob Burns Says—

I don't think people are prudes jest because they like to have their kinfolks show up good. I know I can't help bein' proud when some of my kinfolks do or say things that reflect credit on our family.

I have one cousin that I always thought would be a born poet if the instinct could ever be brought out in him. Not long ago, I drove him down to a cliff overlookin' the ocean and sunset. I says "It's always beautiful like that this time of day." I says "Don't it fill you with sentimental thoughts about the folks back home?"

My cousin says "Yes, about this time of day Maw is out swillin' the pigs."

Symphony Gets $2,000 More Than It Asked

$105,759 Collected to Pay for National Orchestra.

Sweeping past their goal with a comfortable $2,000 margin National Symphony Orchestra workers brought their financial campaign to a jubilant finish yesterday and assured Washington another season of symphony concerts.

A total of $105,759.77 in pledges and contributions was reported at the campaign's final meeting in the Carlton Hotel, and pledges expected to total several hundred dollars more are still to come, leaders said. The goal, set as a minimum requirement for sustaining the orchestra another year, was $103,000.

1,000 Helped in Drive.

L. Corrin Strong, general chairman of the campaign, and Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, vice chairman, and Hans Kindler, conductor of the orchestra since its inception seven years ago, all congratulated the 1,000 campaign workers on their victory.

Recalling the first year of the orchestra when he personally gathered the group of 97 persons who underwrote the symphonic venture, Dr. Kindler paid a tribute to the foresight and civic spirit of those, musicians and sustaining fund subscribers, who had made the first season possible.

Mrs. Howe urged workers to continue efforts to obtain all money and pledges still outstanding, even though the goal has been already reached.

"We are not greedy, but we can use to good effect every cent that can still be collected," she said.

Donors Are Doubled.

The number of contributors to next season's fund more than doubles that of this year's donors, campaign leaders pointed out.

Reports yesterday showed that there are 5,582 contributors to the 1938-39 season, as compored with approximately 2,300 this year.

A campaign summary showing amounts collected by the ten divisions of workers follows:

Special gifts—Thomas P. Morgan, chairman, $60,410.88; men's business—E. Goring Ellis, chairman, $6,553; women's business—Mrs. Foster Adams, Mrs. David Craig and Mrs. C. Stanley Thompson, co-chairmen, $6,721.70; Army—Mrs. H. H. Arnold and Brig. Gen. D. T. Merrill, co-chairmen, $1,860.43; associations—Mrs. Eugene Byrnes and Mrs. Reeve Lewis, co-chairmen, $6,950.10; education, Miss Grace Dunham Guest and Dean Henry Grattan Doyle, co-chairmen, $4,337; government—Mr. Howe and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, co-chairmen, $5,840.72; Navy—Mrs. Emory Scott Land and Mrs. William Robert Munroe, co-chairmen, $4,487.75; orchestra guild—Mrs. Charles Bittinger, chairman, $5,197.25; suburban, $3,314.32. In addition, $1,086.62 was reported too late for allocation among the various committees.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart.

A recommendation to Congressional leaders that the reorganization bill be recommitted and that full and complete hearings be held on it "so that a fair and intelligent bill may be enacted" was made yesterday by Col. Charles I. Stengle, president, American Federation of Government Employes. The bill, as it stands, would serve neither economy nor efficiency, he held.

His statement said, in effect:

"We are apparently on the eve of a vote on this bill, and such a vote, on such a measure—a hodgepodge of conflicting views, based too largely on preconceived ideas and with too little sound factual background—might be disastrous. Several amendments have been accepted under pressure, and more will undoubtedly be offered.

Leading members of the Senate have pointed out the weaknesses of the bill, and from the point of view of economy Senator Byrnes himself has admitted that the maximum savings cannot exceed $30,000,000. Public opposition to the bill is growing.

"Such great organizations as those representing American veterans, and the National Grange, have just been added to the list of those who believe—as do the American Federation of Government Employes and the American Federation of Labor, that the present bill is likely to do more harm than good and that the best interests of all concerned would be served by recommitting it and giving an opportunity for adequate hearings," he stated.

The House has not considered this bill, but has enacted two minor features of the reorganization program. It intends to leave consideration of the bill as a whole to the Senate.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that the Senate should weigh its actions carefully, for a hasty vote would be dangerous. As a matter of fact, I have been told on the highest authority that the final bill, according to present plans, will be written, not by the House or by the Senate, but by conferees, which means that almost anything may happen to it.

There have been no adequate hearings on this bill. Its sponsors were given the opportunity to be heard, but those who had other ideas were left out in the cold. I want to urge that the Senate recommit this bill; that full and complete hearings be held, canvassing every angle, and that a fair and intelligent bill be prepared in the light of these hearings.

I want to emphasize that the American Federation of Government Employes has always stood for economy and efficiency, but in our judgment this bill will produce neither to any marked degree.

Add interesting people in the Interior—Mrs. H. D. Billings, whose painting has attracted considerable interest in art circles here and elsewhere. Much of her work was done in the Southwest, where she was born. Last winter she held an exhibit of her paintings at the Grafton Hotel in the clubrooms of the Pen Women's League, of which she is a member.

Mrs. Billings was until recently a resident of New Mexico, where she first began to study art. She studied there with Raymond Jonson in Santa Fe, N. Mex. Jonson is a well-known painter of the Southwest and has held a number of exhibits in New York and various other cities. He was formerly an instructor in the Chicago Art Institute.

Since residing in Washington she has studied and is now studying with the Corcoran Art School and with Garnet Jex. She was a member of the Art League and one of the original members of the Potomac Landscape Club. Miss Miller has exhibited her paintings at the National Museum, the Independant Art Exhibit and now has a picture with the Grumbacher Aqua-Chromatic Exhibition of Water Colors, which is now on tour throughout the United States. Last year she won first prize in water color at the League of American Pen Women.

Mrs. Billings is employed in the General Land Office, where she has been since coming to Washington.

The Oklahoma Young Democrats of the District of Columbia, Inc., recently held an open house at the Democratic headquarters, 1500 Rhode Island avenue, having as guest artists the Oklahoma Cowboy Quartet of Oklahoma A. and M. College, who are making a tour of the country. Among those attending the function—which was given over largely to dancing—were Senator Josh Lee, Representative and Mrs. Gomer Smith, Representative and Mrs. Lyle Boren, Mrs. Wilburn Cartwright, Mrs. Ocie Heady, and A. Frank Martin. T. Casey, of the social committee, arranged the function . . .
